Where to Hit the Horse
Deadly Fist Fights
Let Haiti Read Froude
Fighting Chinese Women

—By Arthur Brisbane—

HODGE, Cal., Feb. 12—Uncle Sam must raise hundreds of millions more in taxes, unless he economizes, and that he will NOT do, to any extent. Some said, "Tax the heavily taxed big incomes more heavily." But that would discourage enterprises that give work to the idle.

A general manufacturers' tax of 1 per cent was suggested and expected to yield $600,000,000. The drop in manufacturing would now cut that sum to four hundred millions and the tax would discourage employment.

Income tax, customs receipts, are off, but thirteen hundred million extra dollars must be found somewhere. Where to hit a tired horse to make him go faster is the problem. Some say a general sales tax, hitting the horse gentle, everywhere at once, would be the best plan.

In one column you read that Kid Elton, prizefighter, is dead at Palm Beach, of prize ring injuries. In another column you observe the death of a 19-year-old high school boy, killed in a public school boxing match in Los Angeles. A blow on the nose caused a hemorrhage of the brain and death, and the school authorities say, "Just an accident."

Was it necessary, or different from an assault by a bandit? Did it do any good? Has fighting with fists any value now, when every thug carries his "gun"?

Has such fighting any value in war? Does it not promote brutality, uselessly? Is it not a disgrace that public schools and the army and navy should encourage such barbarism?

Haiti protests because her finances are controlled by the United States and managed by American banks. Haiti should rejoice, because, at least, she has a financial system and some credit, which she would not have otherwise.

Dissatisfied Haitians, who think they could manage their finances better, should read Froude's book on the West Indies. It tells of a population, similar to that of Haiti today, one-half free to govern itself and its finances, one-half run by British management. On both sides of the island there had been fine docks, brick buildings. On the side managed by the natives, these fell into ruin, while the natives that owned them went over to work for the British that knew how to provide work and wages. Nothing is more beautiful than human liberty, as Tom Reed said, but you must know how to use it.

China's war takes you back to the mythical days of the Amazons. Harvey Duncan and Carl Lemcke, American business men on their way from Shanghai's foreign settlement to Woosung fort, were stopped by a regiment of short, thick-set Chinese women, wearing earrings and carrying old muskets with bayonets. They were holding trenches that protected their village. The two Americans turned back, the ladies spoke no English.

Later the same Americans tried again and found Japanese occupying those trenches, taken with machine gun fire. Twenty-four of the Chinese fighting women had been buried. Their willingness to be killed may mean trouble that Japan did not anticipate in her Chinese venture. Universal Service tells about it.

Japan announces that, in spite of sad events in China, she, Japan, favors disarmament. In this she is at least as sincere as any other nation, for Japan will need, for the present, only as much armament as is needed to give her what she wants in China. A modest armament will suffice for her fighting needs there, since Japan feels able to attack a nation of four hundred millions, with an army of forty thousand.

The government says we have more gold than we need. So one billion dollars' worth of the metal will be "released" to increase credit and "bring back prosperity." More power to the yellow billion. Wall Street took the promises seriously today and put up prices.

Some less optimistic will ask how much of the billion, turned loose, will be hoarded, how much will find its way in U. S. gold coin to the Bank of France, and how much will be used to expand our currency, which is the thing needed.

Democracy's political pot is boiling. Speaker Garner, whose strength is increasing, remarks that the silver-plated knobs on the White House front door remind him of handles on a coffin.

Alfred E. Smith will be entered as a candidate in North Dakota on Saturday by a friend who was once postmaster, and perhaps would like his job back.

GUNMEN GET $2100 IN RAID ON OFFICE

Ex-Convict Leads Daring Gang in Robbery; Affair Not Reported to Police

By THE MASKED REPORTER
(Copyright, 1932, by Boston Evening American)

A spectacular raid by three gunmen, which has not been reported to the police for several good reasons, netted a daring Boston gang a lucrative haul Wednesday afternoon.

It took place in the hear of the city.

A total of 25 persons were robbed.

They contributed $2100 to the gang's coffers.

And now, private revenge is on the way and a certain paroled convict may have an early funeral.

Masked Reporter

Although the robbers' victims were sworn to secrecy — and that is why the police heard nothing of it — the story came into my possession within a few hours. Since then I have made ironclad verification.

The bold raid victimized the operators and customers of a profitable profitable race track booking office, situated on one of the upper floors of a building in the Washington st. theater district.

That's one reason the police were not told, the enterprise being, of course, an illicit one. The desire and hope for private revenge is the other chief reason.

The building in question, which for certain reasons I must not disclose today, is but a few doors from the busy intersections of Washington, Essex and Boylston sts. Thousands pass it hourly.

There were five in all in the rob-

3 Stations to Be Dropped by B. & M.

The Boston & Maine Railroad has petitioned the State Department of Public Utilities for authority to abandon three railroad stations—at East Somerville, Bardwell and Rosemont.

The East Somerville station has been closed since 1927. Bardwell is located about 4.94 miles east of Shelburne Falls. Rosemont, two and a half miles east of Haverhill on the Portland division, has also been closed for some time.

POPE CALLS FOR PEACE PRAYERS

Colorful Ceremony Marks the Mass Held on 10th Anniversary of His Coronation

Vatican City, Feb. 12 (AP)—Pope Pius celebrated the 10th anniversary of his coronation today with an imposing mass in St. Peter's, surrounded by the Cardinals of the Curia and tens of thousands of worshipers. The Vatican radio station broadcast the mass.

In his blessing the Pope, praying for universal peace, said:

"The Holy Virgin of Lourdes inspired us to invite everyone near us as well as far away to address prayers to the Supreme Lord of the World, asking divine justice representing Him in our tribulations and asking His inspiration that peace may not elude the efforts and researches of man.

'We invite you to do this in the sacred litany of the church.

"Divine providence has willed that in this moment of universal anxiety over the suffering masses of people, the world is turning towards researches for peace and towards means whereby peace may be ensured."

The pontiff was carried in solemn procession from his private apartments to the basilica on the sedia gestatoria or portable throne carried on the shoulders of 16 stalwart Vatican attendants dressed in red.

COLORFUL PROCESSION

As he entered the cathedral six silver trumpets were sounded by Swiss guards. Thousands cheered "Viva il Papa!" and priests cried in Latin, 'Ad Moltos Annos!" meaning "May you live many years longer."

Pius wore a white cassock, and in vivid contrast to it a red mantle, embroidered in gold and studded with jewels.

On his head was the jeweled

ARMS SEIZED IN LYNN; 2 HELD

Two rifles, two revolvers, 1000 pounds of ammunition and two men were seized early today in a raid on a lodging house, Stewart st., Lynn.

One of the revolvers is believed to have been in the lot of 21 stolen from Lynn armory three weeks ago, police said.

The two men arrested, Alfred Adrian, 29, and Louis Maddore, 26, told police the firearms were given them.

In addition to larceny of the firearms with Maddore, Adrian is charged with larceny of $35 from Mrs. Angie Kolandra of Church st., Lynn, who reported a week ago that a man took her purse while he helped her start her stalled automobile.

The cases of both were continued until February 19 on bail of $3000 each.

Insane Man and Cop in Battle

A wild battle in the slush of the Boxford road in Boxford early today ended with the capture of Leonidus Ragotti, 42, by State Trooper Charles J. McCarthy of Topsfield barracks, nearly 12 hours after Ragotti escaped from Danvers State Hospital.

And when the trooper had subdued his man and made him a captive, Ragotti begged the trooper to shoot him.

Ragotti, whose wife and five children live in Haverhill, escaped from Danvers yesterday just as night was closing down.

Topsfield barracks was notified and Trooper McCarthy started out in an automobile for a tour of the roads.

He came upon a man trudging along the Boxford-Haverhill road, near the Boxford line, hailed the man and then got out of the car.

As soon as the trooper asked if the pedestrian were Ragotti, the man leaped for McCarthy and the two went down to the slushy pavement in a wild battle.

McCarthy was too strong for the fugitive, however, and soon overpowered him. He was taken to Topsfield barracks and then back to the hospital.

Unsolicited Asked to Aid Relief

Persons who have not been solicited by the campaign workers for a contribution for the relief of the unemployed are requested to mail or bring their checks today to the general headquarters at 43 Federal st.

The office is open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Checks should be made payabl to the "Treasurer, United Boston Unemployment Relief Campaign."

CLUBMAN SUED BY BEAUTY

New Bedford, Feb. 12—A prominent widower, who is New Bedford's best-known clubman, and a beautiful blonde widow, operator of a beauty parlor, excited New Bedford today through the beautician's attaching the clubman's bank accounts and property in an action fraugh with mystery.

The clubman is Edgar F. Taber, 45-year-old mill treasurer and one of the wealthiest men in the city.

Mrs. Altheda E. Normandin, 33, is the beauty parlor owner who placed attachments on Taber's accounts in five banks and on his home and other property in the sum of $100,000.

The attachments name Harold F. Hathaway of Taunton as counsel for the blonde beauty, but Hathaway was reported by his office as out of Taunton today, and Mrs. Normandid was declared at her establishment to be away from New Bedford.

Taber, when questioned about attachments and Mrs. Normandin, said:

"I know a woman by that name but I haven't the slightest idea why she is suing me—if she is suing me. Your guess is as good as mine, and both of us might be worng."

Women Given Right to Vote in France

Paris, Feb. 12 (AP)—The Chamber of Deputies today gave women the right to vote for candidates to the chamber and to run for office in that branch of the Parliament of France.

The decision thus raised the possibility of women deputies in France, a country which almost alone among the major nations has long declined to grant equal suffrage.

Flames Destroy Old Northbridge Church

Northbridge, Feb. 12 (AP)—The Northbridge Center Congregational Church, built in 1781, the first place of worship in this town, was destroyed by fire today.

The church was valued at more than $25,000.

BULLET SHOWER SENDS GIBBONS TO COVER; FIGHTING INTENSE

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Shanghai, Feb. 12, 9:06 P. M. (INS)—Hello, everybody!

Well, sir, I hopped back here to Shanghai tonight, a little muddy, unshaven and dirty around the collar but still able to report that the oncoming offensive I predicted in my last dispatch is now well under way on the Woosung Creek sector.

Floyd Gibbons

It's no individual effort either. Late this afternoon when I left the scene of the battle both sides seemed to have selected the same moment for a joint offensive.

It looks like it's going to be one of those things where both sides are attacking at the same time and meeting in the middle.

While Japanese reinforcements rushed forward with floating duckboards—sort of single track cork pontoons by which the infantry hoped to cross Woosung Creek for an assault on the German-built defenses—Chinese cavalry scouts and horsemen made a daring foray around the Japanese left flank recalling the famous exploits of Mosby's Confederate cavalry in the Civil War.

German Advisers
Chinese Using New Ideas

The Chinese thereby successfully evaded the Japanese outposts and reached the defenders of Woosung village with fresh supplies and ammunition together with information and advice from German advisers quartered at the Chinese army headquarters in the rear of Chapei.

Also at the same time, Chinese plainclothesmen, by a daring infiltration through the Japanese lines, reopened their house-to-house offensive in the rear of the Nipponese attackers.

Japanese heavy field pieces from positions one mile south of Woosung Creek are laying a drum-fire on the Chinese defenses. This Woosung battle is developing into as many layers as an old-fashioned New England strawberry shortcake.

If something awful don't bust loose in this sector pretty soon, well, I'm going to be mighty wrong in my guess.

Did you read my last dispatch about my adventures in the launch?

NEW FIGHTING IS FURIOUS

By DIXON HOSTE

Shanghai, Feb. 12 (4:30 P. M.) (INS)—Japanese cruisers resumed bombardment of the Woosung district late today, while Japanese airplanes dropped aerial bombs on Chinese mills to the westward in which enemy machine-gunners were entrenched.

The firing was heavy, an official communique stated.

A spokesman for American Minister Nelson T. Johnson declared that the Japanese firing on Woosung began just as the American minister and British Minister Sir Miles Lampson were passing aboard ships of their respective navies, en route to Shanghai from Nanking.

MOVE CRUISER.

Japanese officials asked the British naval headquarters to shift the position of H. M. S. Berwick, moored near Woosung, in order to prevent its being struck accidentally by shells.

In the attack on the Chinese mills Japanese land forces made no attempt to cross Wentsopang creek, according to the communique.

Machine-gun fighting at Woosung creek, which accompanied a Japanese attempt to lay a pontoon bridge, marked the reopening of hostilities in the Shanghai area today four hours after

Sales Tax Salvation of Budget Balancers

Budget balancers at Washington are face to face with a steadily diminishing national revenue and a STEADILY MOUNTING national deficit, whose true extent, although known at the national Capitol, has not yet been disclosed to the country.

It had been freely predicted by well-informed economists (AND IT IS NOW KNOWN AS A FACT) that the income tax would fail to yield anywhere near what it had been expected to produce, and that the falling off would stagger the nation.

It is now definitely known that the deficit is so greatly in excess of all previous Treasury announcements as to shock the taxpayers.

Sound statesmanship must now come to the aid of the budget balancers in seeking new sources of public income. AND THE ANSWER IS AT HAND—A SELECTED SALES TAX.

Economists the world over and well-informed legislators know that the nation must follow the lead of Canada, France, the Philippines and thirteen other foreign nations, and adopt a SELECTED SALES TAX.

It is the salvation of the sorely tried revenue raisers, a safe, sure, simple method, an impost easily collectable and the least painful, the least burdensome of all forms of taxation.

There is no valid argument against a selected sales tax. It has been investigated, studied, debated for years. Congress found some years ago that it would yield $400,000,000 yearly.

It is not an experiment nor an innovation, but a PROVED SUCCESS wherever tried.

In several States of the Union it is a valued source of revenue today. Wherever tried it has been accepted without complaint or hardship by the people.

From no other source could revenue be raised with comparable ease or equal abundance.

A sales tax imposed with discrimination upon selected classes of merchandise best able to support it has the crowning merit of all taxation, as it is INDIRECT, AND NOT FELT AS A BURDEN.

Congress faces the alternative of adopting a SELECTED SALES TAX or a mounting income tax levy which could not be collected and which would not produce the revenue expected of it.

There is a steadily growing demand that Congress adopt a selected sales tax as the LEAST BURDENSOME of all taxation.

Cities Sound, But Broke

Should Cut Expenses, Not Salaries

The financial condition of our Massachusetts communities is much stronger than the country as a whole.

Our per capita cost of government is $65, as compared to $68.80 for the cities of the entire country.

The new debt of our civic communities is $79.70 per person, as against $85.68, the average of the country.

These figures were the latest obtainable in a research conducted by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

They are especially refreshing because the cost of government, it would seem, should be much higher in Massachusetts where the health, clinical and other services rendered to the people by their cities have been much more fully developed.

But the fact that our per capita expense is lower is not the complete answer to the serious problem of city financing.

In some of our famous old cities we see employes getting along without their pay checks; we see citizens like Fred Dumaine reaching into their own pockets to supply the operating cash which even the banks will not loan in anticipation of tax collections.

Our business is not to make our ratio of expense favorable to cities elsewhere, but to make their financial condition firm and impregnable.

We expect our city officials to accomplish this end not by slashing the salaries of faithful public employes but by slashing away the needless expenses which burden the cities and hit the taxpayers a resounding wallop.

Graft in State Buying

There have been grave dishonesties in the purchase of State supplies, according to charges made to the Massachusetts Legislature by reputable citizens.

We saw abundant and nauseating evidence corroborative of those charges in the first audit of some of our State institutions by State Auditor Francis X. Hurley.

Moreover, we saw the disgusting example of little coteries of State employes and officials who formed private corporations among themselves and then patronized their own corporations in the purchase of materials and supplies for the State.

These men could not serve two masters. They gypped either themselves or the State. And the assumption can well be they were adroit enough to protect their own best interests.

The powers and duties of the State Auditor were clipped and impaired by the Legislature because of its dislike for Mr. Alonzo B. Cook when he held the office of State Auditor. In venting their anger upon Mr. Cook, the legislators created a new bureaucracy of appointive officials and vested in them the obligations which the people intended for their State Auditor, whom they elect.

The State Auditor is expected by the people to be the watchdog of the treasury. Give him back the power which has been stolen from him. If he is faithless to the performance of his duty, the people can throw him out by their votes.

Why Not Silence?

A surgeon in Chicago, Dr. Alex Hershfield, has developed a new technique in healing. He intends to prescribe from a "musical pharmacopeia" for not only mental illness but physical disorders as well.

For melancholia, a Wagner opera or a Sousa march is indicated. In nervous breakdowns he orders Grieg's songs and Beethoven's "Pathetique."

Victims of hit-and-run autoists, we suggest, might appreciate hearing "The Ride of the Valkyries." And those who had the misfortune to be spectators of a gang shooting might have their convalescence hastened by Tschaikowski's "1812 Overture" or the "Verdun Symphony" with percussive effects.

They might prefer silence, but it will at least serve to distract their attention awhile from personal matters.

What a jolly time the professional diplomats of the League of Nations have had "halting the hostilities" in the Far East! How effectively the League has functioned!

"There is no war," piously, these diplomats told the world in their best professional manner.

What magic in those few words!

There ARE air raids, naval bombardments, bayonet sorties, machine-gun forays, bombings and blastings, cannon roar on a sixteen-mile front in one sector, hundreds are killed, many hundreds are wounded, non-combatants, innocent women and children are shot down, communities laid waste, the countryside devastated, but THERE IS NO WAR.

The Chinese, the Japanese, the World Powers gathered under arms at Shanghai, watchfully waiting, may have other ideas on the subject but, always, from the League "There is no war."

What an asinine thing this League really is!

How grateful Americans should feel toward that "little group of wilful men" in the United States Senate who fired the nation with the WISDOM, the COURAGE and the PATRIOTISM to overwhelmingly reject American participation in the League!

New York Day by Day -:- By O. O. McIntyre

Versatile Personalities

NEW YORK, Feb. 11—If I were to name the most versatile of the amazing personalities in the metropolis, the choice would be Fulton Oursler. Yet, save in a literary circle, he is least known of the geniuses. Now 38, his accomplishments have taken place in the past nine years.

His beginning was as an obscure reporter on a Baltimore newspaper. To date he has written under five pseudonyms and authored the Anthony Abbot detective stories, the last of which was "About the Murder of a Night Club Lady." He visited a night club but once.

During the year he translated from the German—a $5 wonder book of magic. He is a member of the American Society of Magicians and Society of Psychic Research, and one of the five Americans who can perform India's disappearing rope trick. He aided Houdini in exposing fake mediums.

He wrote "Sandalwood" for Pauline Lord, "The Dreamer" for Glen Hunter, and "All the King's Men," for Grant Mitchell. At the moment he has a play under rehearsal under a nom de plume, and the exciting screen version of "The Spider," for Edmund Lowe, is from his pen.

Last fall he was working on three plays, one with John Erskine, at the same time and along with other duties exercising editorial supervision over a chain of cheaper magazines. He is slated for the presidency of the Authors' Club, founded by Mark Twain.

Oursler has a push-button brain which switches with wild enthusiasm from one thing to another without losing the art of concentration. Quick, fluent and moody, when he grows fatigued he pulls from a shelf a sailor-clad ventriloquist's dummy. He is a master ventriloquist.

* * *

He lives in a drab, mysterious four-storied house in West 70th street and is one of the most difficult men, outside of J. P. Morgan, in the city to reach by telephone. He rarely visits an office but labors in a large, library-like room on the third floor. The remainder of the house is cluttered with shadowy museum pieces.

* * *

It would seem Oursler contributes enough talent for one family, but he's only half of a talented duo. His wife is Grace Perkins, who played two years with Frank Bacon in "Lightnin'" and wrote such best sellers as "Angel Child," "Ex-Mistress," "Night Nurse," "Personal Maid" and "Boy Crazy."

* * *

Oursler, during the fantasia of his astounding career, once edited a musical journal and sponsored several text books for musical colleges. His interests in science and mythology are so keen he can discuss anything from Greek myths to the pathological and psychological motivation behind the present nudist craze.

Nearly six feet, dark, medium build and weighing 165 pounds; he has coal black hair, snapping black eyes and a remotely bright smile. Visitors may find him brooding before an open fireplace, like a dark cloud of wisdom, halting now and then to dictate swift memoranda to an ever-hovering secretary. Despite enchantment for the theater and literature, he is never at opening nights or literary roundups. On occasions he slips away to prowl around magic shops. There is about him in repose an auro of gentle bleakness—a scrupulous neurosis—relieved by brightly colored acts of grace.

* * *

At the Lambs they were discussing a New York bank postponing for one month payment of a huge Cuban government debt. "Then what?" asked Hal Skelly. Cracked Harry Silvey: "They'll probably send a couple of rhumba dancers instead."

* * *

An imported wrestler offered New York its stiffest pompadour, when he took a bow from the ringside the other night. "He looks like a prophylactic toothbrush suddenly scared by Harold Ross," Ring Lardner observed.

AMERICA FIRST! WHY NOT?

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

WE ARE constantly being taken to task in America for not being internationalists, and for being stout nationalists. We wonder why no such propaganda or "educational campaign" appears in Europe.

It is true that no nation long can live unto itself; and we have the best evidence that nations by striking at other nations can only succeed in hurting themselves. We carried nationalism to extremes when we conceived the notion that we could erect an economic Chinese wall against trade from other nations and still have access to the markets of the excluded countries.

Our tariff shows how we can hurt ourselves merely by trying to hurt all other nations.

It is also true that jingoism, chauvinism, self-glorification, splutter and fuss are out of date. These are stupid and dangerous.

But our internationlists appear impatient with such limitations.

Just what do our professional internationalists want America to do?

Will they be satisfied if we pay the debts of Europe?

• • •

Nationalism Is Not Dead

We hear that nationalism is dead—a thing of another age.

But where is it dead?

All through modern history France has been intensely national; her statesmen and rulers always concerned exclusively with France; and never in all history has the spirit of nationalism been so intense and fervent in France as it is today.

Never since the days of ancient Rome has Italy been so intensely nationalistic. It is the boast of Mussolini that he has reawakened an ardent spirit of nationalism. The whole purpose of his philosophy is to make Italians think wholly in terms of Italy.

Never in the memory of living man has England concentrated so exclusively upon England as she is today. Never has there been a time since Elizabeth that England thought more in terms of England than now. The overthrow of the Labor Ministry was brought about by the determination of the people to have a government that would legislate exclusively for England. She is now drawing within herself, taking her stand behind her own goods boxes as she has not done since the days of Bright.

The program in Spain is to create as intense, prideful devotion among the people for Spain—Spain first and Spain all the time.

Where is this weakening of the spirit of nationalism?

Where except in the United States?

• • •

Why the Clamor for Internationalism?

Over in Europe they call internationalists communists.

And Fascists nationalists.

And in Germany Fascists are predominating impressively over the communists. Germany has gone nationalist.

But even Russia is thinking primarily in terms of Russia; her idea of internationalism is for the world to be dominated from Moscow. It is the internationalism of Napoleon the Great.

Why, then, the clamor in America for internationalism? Is it the internationalism of the bankers that our internationalists have in mind?

International bankers are internationalists—ours would like to lift the burden of billions in debts from the people of Europe and saddle it on the people of their own country.

• • •

Wilson Put His Foot Down

Woodrow Wilson has been thought to have had an international outlook, but when the suggestion was made about the debts in his time he put his foot down.

Our internationalists tell us that our prosperity rests to a considerable extent on the restoration of prosperity in Europe, and that is true; and that is the reason it was stupid to build a tariff wall making it impossible for Europe to trade. But our internationalists are not making so much of that. They cling to the debts.

We loaned billions to Europe; and the nations of Europe used this money for their own benefit—for national, not international purposes. Some was used to strengthen national armies and navies; some to strengthen national industries.

Now it appears we are Shylocks injuring Europe by expecting to get the money back

We sacrifice America to Europe—and that is "internationalism"?

And would France, England, Italy do it if conditions were reversed? Not in a million years

American Children Are Starving

We have some sympathy with a sane international outlook, but we want no internationalism that sacrifices America and Americans. When children in Belgium were hungry we fed them; when French children were hungry we fed them; when German children were starving we fed them; when Russian children were without food we furnished it. Out of the American treasury!

But now that American children are starving, where are the tears for them? Statesmen who tearfully voted money from the treasury to feed the children of other nations are opposed to feeding starving children of America from the American treasury.

Too much internationalism!

Thirty-five years ago Theodore Roosevelt predicted that our republican institutions would be dead within fifty years—and that gives us fifteen more.

Isn't it time to seek a robust American leadership in Washington; to find men for power who think more in terms of America—and all America?

Age Talks to Youth

Old age whispered: "Youth, beware!
Love will lead you into care.

"When the glamour disappears
Lovers wake to sighs and tears.

"Love is duty, love is pain,
Sacrifice and loss and gain.

"Look at us, grown old and gray;
Would you fade the self-same way?

"Would you have your features wear
Such deep-graven lines of care?"

"Yes," said youth, "for that we pray.
We would fade the self-same way.

"All that you have known of care,
Pain and anguish we would share.

"And when grown as old as you
May we be as wrinkled, too."

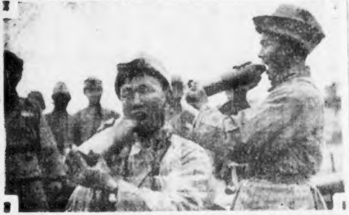
BATTLE DEAD, RIDDLED WITH LEAD, TOPPLE INTO MUDDY RIVER

GIBBONS COVERS WIDE FIGHTING AREA AND SEES JAPS LOSE HEAVILY IN ATTACK



Although these Chinese soldiers look as though they were drinking from thermos bottles, such is not the case. The troops, who are now defending Shanghai from the invasion of the Japanese, are biting the caps off three-inch shells so that they will explode on contact with the ground or the object at which they are aimed. graph in Shanghai's American newspaper, as follows:

"A warning against the use of Woosung creek was broadcast today by Captain Yukuchi of the Japanese headquarters staff, as the result of the appearance of a tiny vessel off Woosung creek. The boat flew the stars and stripes at her stern. She was not fired on by Japanese forces because she flew the American flag, but as Japanese military believe the boat's occupants actually were Chinese, no such courtesy hereafter will be shown foreign-owned craft unless notification is first given to Japanese army headquarters."

Ain't that the pay-off?

Bullet Shower
Jap Planes Let Loose

This man's undeclared war which has been going on for a hundred and some days blew into another sudden burst of action today which had me guessing for a while.

After a lot of cruising around here in my speedboat to get a line on the Japanese bombardment of the Chinese shore defenses about Woosung, I borrowed a runabout and hit the military road along the shore of the Yangtze and headed back for Woosung creek.

As I reached the creek a sudden roar of motors overhead was followed by the staccato of a machine-gun as a Japanese airplane dove below across the road.

Didn't Hesitate
Stepped On The Gas!

I couldn't figure out what the pilot was firing at, and my curiosity was shared by two Chinese linemen straddling the crosspieces of a telegraph pole fixing the wires 100 yards off.

They looked blandly upward, the same as I, wondering as to the cause of the firing—but not for long! As the splinters began to fly from the telegraph pole the linemen realized suddenly that they were the targets for the aerial visitor.

Both shinnied down in a hurry as the plane zoomed upward and circled above, again firing bullets kicking up mud around the Chinese fleeing across the low field, in and out between large mounds of Chinese graves.

Guns Rattle
Japs Beaten Off

As I send this dispatch back by courier, I still wonder whether the Japanese airman saw the Czecho-Slovakian flag which fluttered on the radiator cap of my car.

I didn't waste any time wondering at the moment, though—I just stepped on the gas!

This was just the beginning, the forerunner of a stiff battle.

The Japanese sailors, after two weeks, have failed to occupy the north railroad station in the Shanghai Chinese city, but the Japanese land forces certainly have moved into both railroad stations on the south side of Woosung creek.

This was apparent as I parked my car in the shelter of a foreign cemetery wall through which Japanese advance guards had made a breech as they drove the Chinese defenders before them the previous day. The railroad station beside the cemetery was surmounted by the Japanese sun flag, flying from a tall bamboo pole lashed to the chimney.

Rifles were cracking intermittently, a mere omen of the fire that was to follow almost immediately.

Japanese field guns were firing from behind a bamboo enclosure, tossing shells on well-constructed Chinese defenses extending westward for more than a mile on the north shore of Woosung creek.

Machine gun fire from Chinese defenses suddenly broke out in a rattling crescendo as the Japanese infantry attempted to swing Chinese barges into pontoon position close beside a destroyed railroad bridge which crossed the creek.

Japanese machine gunners and riflemen, firing from the trenches and behind individual steel armor plates on the south side of the creek, increased a crackling fire into a roar, endeavoring to cover the advance of the bridge builders.

Shower of Bombs
Chinese Still Hold Out

The costly attempt failed with severe losses to Japanese soldiers who, riddled with lead, plunged headforemost into the muddy waters of Woosung creek, while the wounded were sprawled on the barges, crawling and dragging themselves, seeking shelter behind wooden gunwales, which were splintered by the ripping blasts of machine-gun fire.

In the midst of the repulsed crossing, Japanese destroyers again hurled shells from the Whangpoo river on the right and seaplanes overhead dropped heavy explosives on the Chinese side of the creek, causing terrific destruction, but not silencing the steady and persistent fire of the Chinese defenders.

The Japenese made two other costly attempts to cross the creek during the afternoon, but failed again with severe losses.

Afterward the Japanese wounded were carried back from the creek shore trenches to a temporary hospital in railroad shops, which also are the army headquarters for this sector.

Funny Kicks
A Japanese Trick

Reinforcements landing hourly indicate an early resumption of the battle. In the meantime the sky above the ruins of Woosung village was heavy with smoke from burning buildings.

You know this war packs more surprises and funny kicks than a grab bag at a church fair.

After witnessing the terrible lacing a Japanese destroyer gave the Chinese positions on the shore front of Woosung creek which I told you about yesterday, I was putt-putting up the Whangpoo in my speedboat when the thunder of a naval cannon and the rattle of Chinese machine-guns was suddenly replaced by a calm silence as a cargo passenger ship put in its appearance around the bend coming upstream from the mouth of the Yangtze.

Both sides seem to lay off the conflict whenever commercial shipping under any flag starts moving up the international waterway. I watched the oncoming craft with particular interest, because she flew the Japanese flag, and her blunt bow, broad beam, and yellow-painted sides marked her as one of a regular Japanese line of passenger-freight boats plying the Yangtze River.

All Carry Flags
Chinese Guns Silent

These Yangtze river boats are all flags. They carry light steel plates and shield covering the bridge, deck and portholes as a protection from Chinese bullets up river where the bandits are active.

The Japanese ship, without a human being in sight aboard her, steamed slowly past Woosung village. The muzzles of the Chinese defense guns were not 50 yards from her sides, yet not a single shot was fired at her.

Less than a mile above Woosung Creek, the steamer quickly docked beside the old Chinese railway wharf, now occupied by Japanese land forces.

Steel armored screens were lowered to protect the gangplanks as they were dropped to the dock, and out marched long files of khaki-clad tin-helmeted Japanese infantrymen with full marching packs, rifles at the ready, and bayonets gleaming.

The Japanese commercial ship had been transformed without the knowledge of the Chinese into a troopship ferrying reinforcements from the Japanese army transports lying down the Yangtze under protection of Japanese cruisers and air carriers.

Strategy Works
Chinese Are Fooled

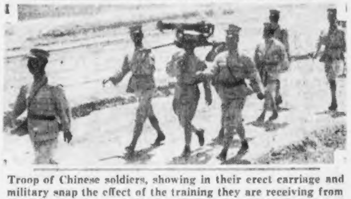
The Chinese had permitted these reinforcements to pass within 50 yards of the muzzles of their guns on the way to attack them. That is either courtesy or dumbness.

In the midst of this landing operation, under the guns of a watchful Japanese destroyer standing by in midstream, my hat was blown off again by the appearance of a Chinese gunboat coming down the Whangpoo.

These Chinese gunboats are low, flat steel craft. They are armored and mount three-inch guns designed especially for patrol work.

Would the Chinese warship take a shot at the Japanese destroyer which had just finished bombarding the Chinese army? Would she interfere with the landing of the Japanese reinforcements? I watched expectantly.

CHINESE AND JAP GUNBOATS EXCHANGE SALUTES, NOT SHOT



Troop of Chinese soldiers, showing in their erect carriage and military snap the effect of the training they are receiving from former German army officers. They are carrying a small field piece on their shoulders to be used in the defense of Shanghai. (I.N.R. photo.)

More Politeness
Foe's Ships in Salute

Bugles sounded aboard the Chinese craft. There was lots of activity on deck. Uniformed sailors ran about taking their positions. At the same time there were bugle calls and activity aboard the Japanese destroyer.

It looked as though everything were ready for action—an exchange of broadside salvos. It was action all right, but no belligerency—just more politeness.

The Chinese gunboat dipped its colors—yessir, lowered that striped flag of the Republic of China from the foremast. Bugles sounded again and the uniformed Chinese sailors stood in a rigid line at attention on the deck.

The Japanese destroyer returned the salute in a like manner as the Chinese warship slid past downstream. There was no roughness. It was just like love and kisses.

Road Deserted
Countryside Is Drab

I docked my speedboat upstream opposite the power station where an English-speaking Czecho-Slovakian manager was bravely struggling to keep the plant running despite the desertion of his Chinese coolie coal bearers.

He generously loaned me his runabout, his only means of a getaway, and I hit the military road along the shore back once more in the direction of Woosung creek.

Both Chinese and Japanese troops appeared to have deserted the road. Both sides of the road were lined with trees and occasional groups of Chinese peasant huts and compounds. There was no sign of life.

The countryside was all drab, mud-colored stretches of flats to the west, to the north it was criss-crossed by numberless creeks and canals, a labyrinth of connecting and intersecting waterways, like a Venetian street plan transplanted to the country.

The Japanese sailors, after two weeks of battling, have failed to occupy the north railroad station in the Chinese city of Shanghai, but Japanese forces certainly have moved into both railroad stations on the south side of Woosung creek.

Village Fighting
Guns Are Hidden

I parked my car in the shelter of a foreign cemetery wall through which the Japanese advance guards had made a breach as they drove the Chinese defenders before them on the previous day.

The railroad station beside the cemetery was surmounted by the Japanese sun flag, flying from a tall bamboo pole lashed to the chimney. Rifles were cracking intermittently. There was fighting in the streets of the nearby village.

Japanese field guns were firing from behind a bamboo enclosure, tossing shells on the well-constructed Chinese defenses, extending westward for more than a mile on the north shore of Woosung Creek.

Machine gun fire suddenly broke out from the Chinese defenses. It rattled into a crescendo as Japanese infantrymen attempted to swing Chinese barges in the creek into position for a pontoon bridge beside a destroyed railroad bridge crossing the creek.

Many Japs Die
Dead Fall Into River

Japanese machine gunners and riflemen were firing from trenches and behind individual steel armor plates on the south side of the creek. They increased their crackling fire to a roar, endeavoring to cover the advance of the bridge builders.

The costly attempt failed, with severe losses to the Japanese soldiers. The dead, riddled with lead, plunged head foremost into the muddy waters of the Woosung, while the wounded sprawled on the barges, crawling and dragging themselves, seeking shelter behind the wooden gunwales, which were splintered by ripping blasts of machine gun fire.

In the midst of the repulsed crossing, Japanese destroyers again hurled shells from the Whangpoo river on the right and seaplanes overhead dropped heavy explosives on the Chinese side of the creek, causing terrific destruction, but not silencing the steady, persistent fire of the Chinese defenders.

The Japanese made two more costly attempts to win their way across the creek during the afternoon, but they failed twice more with terrific losses.

Tonight a number of Japanese wounded were being carried back from the creek shore to the trenches, thence to a temporary hospital in the railroad shops, which are also the military headquarters in this sector.

Reinforcements are landing on the creek bank hourly. This indicates an early resumption of the battle tomorrow.

TERRIFIC NEW ATTACK LAUNCHED ON SHANGHAI

the expiration of the truce arranged for the Chapei area.

Although the purpose of the truce, which was in effect from 8:00 a. m. until noon, was to permit foreign Red Cross workers to enter Chapei and rescue beleaguered civilians, it actually worked out much to the surprise of those who arranged it.

As a result of announcements in Chinese newspapers that the lines would be open for Chinese to go into Chapei and salvage their household goods, thousands filed in and lugged out everything from live chickens to brass beds.

CHINESE CALM

Thus while Red Cross nurses went aimlessly about through charred streets looking for someone to rescue, thousands of Chinese waded through the settlement defenders, worming their way through doors and holes in the walls of buildings bordering Chapei, hurrying to their deserted homes and completely ignoring the Red Cross workers.

This correspondent visited the shell of the North station, which, up until yesterday, has been under a continual Japanese fire. There were about 50 smiling and apparently happy Chinese troops of the 19th "fight-to-the-death" army holding the station.

Their ammunition belts were filled and their morale was high.

Their attitude contrasted sharply with that of most of the Japanese troops, who have been extremely nervous and have had their fingers on the triggers of their guns ever since the fighting broke out.

PEEVED AT ATTACK

A spokesman for American Minister Johnson declared the Japanese "must have timed their attack on Woosung purposely."

"It was incredible," the spokesman said upon his arrival at the branch of the American legation, located at the consulate-general here.

"Unless I had witnessed it myself I would never have believed the Japanese would have staged a naval attack on Woosung just as the U. S. S. Simpson, bearing Johnson, and a British gunboat, bearing British Minister Lampson, arrived near the forts this morning," the spokesman said.

"A Japanese cruiser fired eight shells into the fort, and shortly afterward a destroyer fired more. Then a plane dropped bombs upon the fort, one of which fell in the water less than a quarter of a mile from our bows.

"The Chinese did not reply. The Japanese of course knew the British and American ministers were aboard, and they must have timed their attack purposely."

The plan of the two diplomats to come to Shanghai from Nanking, where they are stationed, was announced publicly two days ago, and the time of their trip also was made known.

VILLAGE IS WIPED OUT.

The American spokesman said Woosung village was practically leveled, while a bridge over Woosung creek was burning as a result of a Japanese bomb having hit it today.

He declared Johnson would be here only a few days, and would meet Japanese Minister Shigemitsu, but it was doubtful whether all foreign ministers would confer with Shigemitsu jointly.

The Simpson anchored here at 10 a. m., and Johnson immediately was taken aboard the flagship of United States Admiral Taylor, where he went into conference.

ADMIRAL ANGRY

Charging that the Chinese had violated the four-hour truce arranged in the Chapei district this morning for the evacuation of noncombatants and wounded, Admiral Nomura, Japanese naval commander, today dismissed a request that the armistice be extended.

The British and American consuls-general, Brenan and Cunningham, called upon the admiral abord his flagship and explained that the Chinese desired more time to search for their wounded and for civilians still hiding in the Chapei district.

"What truce?" asked Nomura, with a trace of anger. "So far as the Chinese are concerned there has been no truce.

"They fired on our positions during the period from 8 a. m., until noon, when a truce was supposed to be in effect and they spent the forenoon erecting barbed-wire entanglements.

"This was in direct violation of our agreement."

Umberto Nobile

Moscow, Feb. 12—A fleet of dirigibles, to be built over a period of three years, will be designed and constructed by Gen. Umberto Nobile, Italian commander of the ill-fated dirigible expedition to the North Pole, it has been announced by the Soviet government.

The contract with Nobile calls for his co-operation with the Soviet Aeronautical Institute. He will be assisted by a group of experts recruited from Italy. It is not known what the number, size or type of ships will be.

According to Nobile's contract he will also have to participate next summer in a Soviet scientific expedition to the Arctic regions, in connection with the world-wide observance of Polar Year.

Chile Wants $10,000 From Arthur Loew and Hal Roach

Arthur Loew

Miami, Fla., Feb. 12—Demands by the Chilean government that Arthur Loew, theatrical producer, and Hal Roach, motion picture director, pay a $10,000 fine for leaving Chile without obtaining departure papers on their airplane tour of South America, have the pair completly at a loss.

"We had all the papers necessary," Loew said, "and we thought everything was proper. We saw somebody wave to us as we took off from Santiago but thought it was a fond farewell and paid no attention to the incident."

Loew stated both he and Roach were particularly anxious not to displease any country they touched on during their flight. Loew flew here yesterday from San Juan, Porto Rico.

Charlestown Explosion Caused by Incendiary Bomb

LIVES OF FIVE IMPERILLED BY FIREBUG

State Inspector Finds Traces of Deadly Apparatus After Fire Is Squelched

The explosion in the cellar of a three-story building in City sq., Charlestown, early today, was caused by an "incendiary bomb,", authorities announced.

Announcement was made while Louis Maglio, of Call st., Charlestown, owner of the building, was being questioned in headquarters and attributing the blast to a plot on his life. He asked protection.

Inspector Albert Caulfield, Jr., of the fire marshal's office, said the explosion was apparently caused by a new type of apparatus used to start incendiary fires.

Such apparatus usually consists of a long fuse leading to a paper bag containing cellophane on which gasoline has been poured.

FUMES EXPLODED

Caulfield said he believed the explosion was caused by ignition of gasoline fumes from the spark of the fuse before the spark reached the bag.

Had the bomb not been fired prematurely a serious fire might resulted, and Emilio Elazzio, his wife and three children, living on the third floor, might have lost their lives. As it was, the firemen confined the blaze to the basement, and the loss was $400.

A section of fuse and a paper bag were found by police.

Maglio has a wife and three children. He conducts a poolroom on the first floor of the building. Questioned regarding his claim of a plot against him, he admitted that the second floor, at present unoccupied, had been rented to bootleggers for a speakeasy until two weeks ago. They still owe him $30 rent, he said.

REFUSED TO SIGN PETITION

Another motive might lie in his recent refusal to sign a petition for a man who sought to open a place of business near his, he said.

Anyone in the poolroom had access to the basement, he pointed out. He closed the poolroom about an hour before the blast, he said.

ATTACK VICTIM REGARDS IT AS LIFE MISSION

Will Go on Stand and Tell All the Details Despite Terrifying Experience

Honolulu, Feb. 12 (INS)—Indomitable courage and the irrepressible spirit of youth are leading Thalia Massie back to health and the normal activities of life.

Where another, less sturdy, soul might have succumbed to the shock of two crushing tragedies in the brief space of four months, the young U. S. Navy matron who is the central figure of Honolulu's social and political upheaval told me today that she has a "serious mission to perform in life."

This mission, she declared, is to tell the whole story of her terrible experience "to save other girls and awaken Honolulu's long dormant public conscience."

Mrs. Massie will celebrate her 21st birthday on Sunday, St. Valentine's Day. Typifying the modern girl in every respect, she refuses to believe that the futures of herself and her husband, Lieut. Thomas Massie, have been blasted forever.

SCORNS SELF PITY

"There is no earthly good now," she said, "in crying or feeling sorry for myself."

The interview, in which Mrs. Massie told for the first time the full and complete story of the tragedy, hiding nothing, shielding no one, took place aboard the United States navy receiving ship Alton in Pearl harbor.

It is aboard this ship that Mrs. Massie's husband, her mother, Mrs. Grace Fortescue, and Edward J. Lord and Albert O. Jones, enlisted navy men, are being held pending trial on second degree murder charges arising from the "honor slaying" of Joe Kahahawai, ringleader of five gangsters alleged to have assaulted the pretty matron on the night of Sept. 12.

Judge Hood ordered Egan committed to jail for six months—not for the black eyes, but because he was back in his temporary alimony payments.

1 HURT FLEEING HOSPITAL 'FIRE'

One patient was injured and scores were aroused early today when a burning wooden work shack outside City Hospital sent a glare into the windows of the hospital wards.

Charles Steele of Hartford st., Dorchester, fled from ward 4 in his night clothing, hit a door casing and collapsed in the snow having suffered an injured back.

Miss Helen Girard and Miss Mary LeBlanc, nurses in the maternity ward, saw the blaze and called the hospital operator to telephone a still alarm.

Apparatus responded with muffled bells and sirens and put out the blaze.

HOSPITAL MUST RAISE FUND

Warning against the dangers attendant on the present lowered incomes of hospitals, Dr. Shields Warren, chief of staff of the Deaconess Hospital, today told the women's committee of the Deaconess Hospital fund that drastic curtailments would be necessary at the hospital unless the $1,600,000 were raised.

Forty women were present at the Women's Republican Club for the combined luncheon and report meeting. Between $13,000 and $14,000 has already been raised by the committee.

Dr. Warren also described some of the modern ways in which cancer is treated at the hospital and outlined the progressive program of research that the Deaconess Hospital wishes to follow, once its financial difficulties have been finally settled.

STEVENS LEADS "SLUMP WAR"

"The American Legion has declared war against the economic crisis," its national commander, Henry L. Stevens, Jr., said at a city breakfast in his honor at the Copley-Plaza today.

"The Legion army to fight hard times is two and a half times the size of the American Expeditionary Force. If we can't rebuild America economically, no one can," he said.

He did not elaborate.

"I'll have more to say about that tomorrow," he stated.

He is here primarily to be guest of honor at the Legion banquet tomorrow night.

Acting Mayor Edward M. Gallagher, who presided, referred to a Legion movement to put 1,000,000 men to work.

"I believe you are correct in your contention that the great leaders of industry can afford to increase the number of employes by 10 per cent in order to help this nation-wide movement under auspices of the Legion," Gallagher said.

About 50 attended the luncheon which was arranged in behalf of Mayor Curley by Stanton R. White. Those at the head table included State Comdr. Stephen Garrity, Thomas Bird, Stevens' aid; Richard Paul, national vice-commander; Jeremiah Lahey, department vice-commander, and William J. McMorrow, past county commander.

After the breakfast Stevens was received at the State House by Governor Ely, who will tender him a luncheon tomorrow noon. Stevens will be here until Monday.

B. & M. ASKS FOR FEDERAL LOAN

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—Two railroads today asked Interstate Commerce Commission permission to borrow money from the Railroad Credit Corp. and the Reconstruction Corp.

The Boston & Maine Railroad asked authority to issue $57,500,000 worth of bonds to mature March 1, 1952, to retire other bonds and reimburse its treasury for improvements.

It would obtain the money by pledging the new bond issue as security for a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corp.

The Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie railway asked authority to borrow $2,990,173 from the railroad corporation to pay interest on bonds due at various times between March 1 and September 1.

The application said "the proposed borrowing is absolutely necessary to prevent default in payment of obligations due at various times between March 1 and September 1."

Hoover and Mellon Exchange Praises

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—President Hoover today accepted the formal resignation of Andrew W. Mellon as secretary of the treasury, and paid service in that post.

The new ambassador to Great Britain told the President he left "with the highest regard for you and your administration."

The President, in reply, said he knew of "no more magnificent tribute that has come to a public servant" than the expressions of esteem coming from both "the press and the public."

Here We Have 'Em. Kings of Dogdom Show Their Best at New York Show

AL SMITH'S BROWN DERBY?

Looking like a real "hard guy." This giant St. Bernard dog, an entrant in the annual Westminster Kennel Club dog show in Madison Square Garden, New York, calmly looks over the field of entries. Perched on his handsome head is a derby, but this one's black, not brown.

HIS HAT'S IN—AND WHAT A HAT

"Dewhurst Dan," prize English bulldog, wanted to make sure his hat would be in the ring when it came time for judges to pass on entries in the show. So he brought his hat with him and here's how he appeared all dressed up for the judges. (International Newsreel photos.)

LARGEST DOG—SMALLEST BOY

"Sonny" Bishop, Jr., of Ridgefield Park, N. J., looks up admiringly at the immensity of "Tiger King," a great Dane, the largest entrant in the show. "Tiger King" weighs 175 pounds and measures three feet from the ground to his shoulder. No wonder Sonny looks on in awe!

WARRANTS FOR 2 IN SHOOTING

Thomas Queeney's version of the circumstances under which he yesterday shot James Gately, 32, of Marcella st., Roxbury, during an alleged attempted store holdup, was officially upheld by Judge Ahearn in Roxbury court today.

Court refused warrants charging Queeney with assault and issued warrants charging Gately and Hugh Gillen, 22, of Norfolk ave., Roxbury, with assault on Queeney with attempt to rob him in his store at Norfolk ave. and Hampden st.

Gately, shot in the stomach, is still on the danger list at City Hospital. Queeney said the pair threatened him, because someone had written a letter to police about them, and tried to rob him. Gately was arrested on a roof-top after the shooting.

Curb Recommended on Extra Fare Trains

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—Two interstate commerce commission examiners today joined in recommending limitation of extra fare passenger train service to one-third the number of through trains operated by any one railroad.

The proposed report, written by Examiners A. S. Worthington and M. L. Boat, if adopted by the commission, would have the effect of reducing the number of extra fare services between New York and Chicago and St. Louis.

HOOVER SPEECH ON LINCOLN IN BROADCAST

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—Abraham Lincoln't memory will be honored tonight in nation-wide observance of his 123d birthday anniversary by the Republican patty, led by President Hoover.

Hoover will speak on the life of the man who preceded him during the troublous days of the Civil War, using the N. B. C. radio chain to carry his words to the rallies of the party faithful all over the country.

Key men of the party will supplement this address at each dinner gathering and an entire hour of radio time will be taken on a national hookup by prominent speakers.

SPEECHES IN CONGRESS

Lincoln's memory was recalled today in Congress too, with appropriate speeches by members in each chamber.

President Hoover will not attend the principal party dinner here tonight but will speak at 10:30 p. m. (E. S. T.) from the White House study in which Lincoln transacted the affairs of state of his day—long before modern executive offices were provided.

The dinner in the capital, to be attended by several hundred party stalwarts, will be addressed by Senator Watson of Indiana, G. O. P. head in the Senate; by Senator Hatfield of West Virginia, by Secretary of the Interior Wilbur, and Mrs. Dolly Gann, sister of the Vice-President.

MRS. GANN, CAMPAIGNER

The two last named chose to speak on subjects with a militant campaign application, Wilbur's topic being "'64 to Be Repeated," and Mrs. Gann asserting "Women Have Faith in Hoover."

Other important party dinners will be in New York city, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Portland, Me.; Evansville, Ind.; Louisville, Duluth, Seattle, Oklahoma City, Greensboro, N. C., and Miami.

LaGuardia Resolve Asks Mooney Pardon

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—Representative Laguardia of New York today introduced a resolution which would have the House of Representatives urger Governor Rolph of California to pardon Tom Mooney.

The proposal recited the conclusions recahed in numerous investigations of the renowned Preparedness Day bombing in San Francisco.

4 Paroled New York Racketeers Hunted

New York, Feb. 12 (AP)—Police were seeking Owen (Owney) Madden and three other ex-convicts today for return to prison as parole violators.

Madden, reputed to be one of the city's major racketeers, and the others were ordered arrested after they had been mentioned in the attoney-general's investigation of an alleged laundry racket.

Brockton Man Dying in Auto Accident

Brockton, Feb. 12—John Brady, 34, of Denton st., is dying in Brockton Hospital, suffering from a fracture of the skull as a result of being struck by an automobile in Montello st., early today.

The machine, police said, was operated by Chester Cioni, of Lyman st.

Devens Officer Ended Life to Balk Expose as Negro

Gilroy, Cal., Feb. 12 (INS)—A new element of mystery today entered the case revolving about the death of Lieut. William French, formerly attached to Camp Devens, Mass., near here last month.

Leon Thomas, a justice of the peace, received two letters from Lieut. French's sister, Mrs. Marion French Gray of Chicago, in which she minted Lieut. French had killed himself in fear that an asserted racial masquerade was about to be exposed.

Mrs. Gray wrote that Mrs. Gertrude McEnroe, the attractive brunette who was riding in Lieut. French's automobile when French was killed, was French's former wife and had threatened to expose the alleged fact that French had Negro blood.

French, a graduate of a Chicago high school, for years was known in the Army as a white man, and Army officers were amazed, after French was killed, at rumors that he was one-eighth negro.

Mrs. Gray wrote that her brother had married Mrs. McEnroe, a woman much older than himself, when he was 18 years old.

Mrs. Emily French, 84, the mother of Mrs. Gray and of Lieut. French, resides in the home of a negro family in Pasadena. She nied, after her son was found shot to death near his automobile, that the French family had negro blood, and insisted the Pasadena family merely was taking care of her.

$6,870,000 Suit in Liner Fire Dropped

Belfast, Ireland, Feb. 12 (AP)—The formal claim for £2,000,000 (about $6,870,000) against the Belfast Corporation by the Furness-Withy steamship line for alleged malicious injuries to the liner Bermuda by fire last year was withdrawn today.

Counsel for the owners said they were unable to obtain any evidence in proof of malice.

WOOSUNG FORT 'LIKEE HELLEE,' SAYS CHINESE

Copyright, 1932, by the Associated Press

Shanghai, China, Feb. 12 (AP) — Battered Woosung, target of heavy Japanese bombardments for a week, is "too muchee likee hellee," a Chinese sergeant said today, describing the crumbled ruins there in which the Chinese have been maintaining a dogged defense.

It is a veritable No Man's Land by day but it becomes a great Chinese beehive under cover of darkness when the eye of the Japanese airman, alert by day to drop his devastating bombs, can see it no longer. In the darkness the Chinese bustle about building up their defenses for the next day's battle.

PLACE IS SHAMBLES

The sergeant, with his descriptive pidgin English, was spending the day in the back areas, like thousands of others of the 19th Chinese route army, resting for the night's activities. He was encountered during the partial truce declared today for the evacuation of the few remaining Germans at Tungchi University, near Woosung.

There is scarcely a hut or any other brick or frame building in the village which has not been blasted by aerial bombs or Japanese navy guns, or peppered by machine guns until it looks like a sieve.

The little village, which the Japanese put on the map for the newspaper-reading world and which they are energetically preparing to take off again, is a worse wreck thany many towns in France after the battles of the World War.

FLIMSY TARGETS.

In the first place, Woosung is a village chiefly of mud huts and other dwellings made of tin and nondescript materials, making flimsy targets for the heavy bombardment to which it has been subjected. Its population, normally from 8000 to 12,000, is made up chiefly of Chinese fishermen, river boatmen and coolies who live from hand to mouth.

The fortress has fared much better than the nearby village. It has been seldom directly hit by the heavy guns from the river, but the guns in its own battlements today were very much out of joint.

The heavy bombardments, however, apparently have not yet broken the Chinese morale.

LIVED IN DUGOUT.

The wives and children of 20 to 30 German professors, who were evacuated from Woosung today, spent the daytime hours for more than a week in a single large dugout beneath the University Building, leaving there only at night when the aerial bombardments ceased. The University grounds cover several hundred acres and the institution normally has 600 Chinese students.

WILL ROGERS MAKES HIMSELF AT HOME

SPEAKER GARNER WILL ROGERS

If you invite Will Rogers to "make himself at home," he'll take you up, Speaker of the House John N. Garner found when the humorist visited him at the capitol. Seated in the speaker's chair, his feet on the desk, Rogers wouldn't move even to shake hands with his accommodating host. (International Newsreel photo.)

ROOSEVELT TO QUIZ FARLEY

Albany, Feb. 12 (INS)—Gov. Roosevelt will play the role of judge, jury and prosecutor at Tuesday's hearing on removal charges against Sheriff Thomas M. Farley, powerful Tammany leader.

"I intend to do the questioning," the Governor said today.

His statement was interpreted here as meaning that he does not intend to permit Judge Samuel Seabury to cross-examine Farley.

The Governor, however, has asked Seabury to be present at the hearing in the executive chambers.

The fact that the Governor and not Seabury will question Farley, revived reports today that a rift has developed between them over the manner in which the Governor is handling the case. Seabury is reported to have advised the Governor last week to remove Farley without a further hearing.

Meanwhile, in New York, former Dist. Atty. William M. K. Olcott, began preparation of the case against Farley.

Lincoln Would Fail With 1932 G. O. P. Says Gov. Pinchot

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 12 (AP) Governor Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania says Abraham Lincoln and his platform of human rights wouldn't get to first base with the controlling powers of the Republican convention in Chicago if he were to run for President his year.

Speaking on the eve of a huge celebration of Lincoln's birth, Pinchot told an audience here that today's festivities were "an empty tribute, a useless gesture, if we lost sight of all he worked and fought for and gave his life for."

Montevideo "On Strike"

Montevideo, Uruguay, Feb. 12 (AP)—There were no taxicabs or newspapers today because of a general strike.

8 HURT AS BUS SPILLS AUTO

Putnam, Ct., Feb. 12 (INS)—Eight persons were injured and at least 35 others escaped death today when a bus sideswiped a Webster, Mass., automobile in the fog at West Thompson, two miles north of here.

All the injured were from Webster. They were taken to Day-Kimball Hospital.

The injured were all passengers of the automobile, which went over an embankment and turned over, pinning them beneath it.

The driver of the bus, John Waddington, said he turned out to avoid hitting a parked car and that the rear of the bus skidded into the automobile.

PARTY SURVEY LED SMITH TO BE CANDIDATE

By LOUIS SEIBOLD

New York, Feb. 12—The decision of Al Smith to be a "receptive" candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination was reached after a complete survey of party conditions.

There was nothing haphazard about it. Smith's professional and voluntary advisors prospected the ground for three months before he yielded to their importunities to make another try.

An important factor in the plan to draft Smith again was the canvas designed to reveal the sentiment on the prohibition issue. This was conducted by National Chairman Raskob and showed an unmistakable trend to the wet side.

SMITH HAS GAINED

With these satisfactory results concerning the irritating wet and dry problem, Smith's admirers were convinced that he had gained a lot of ground during the last four years.

They next turned their attention to the other vulnerable link in his presidential availability—his religious faith.

It is still a question in the minds of many Democratic leaders whether Smith's religious views cost him the electoral vote of six Southern states.

A third factor that induced Smith to get into the game was the floundering and evasiveness of Governor Roosevelt. A fourth was the belief that Tammany could not afford to fight Smith. A fifth was confidence that Smith would attract a bigger campaign fund than any other candidate.

FRIENDS HOPEFUL.

In canvassing Smith's chances, more attention was paid to the Southern States than any other, though no part of the country was neglected.

The important fact is that Smith's friends, including many wealthy wets in both parties and disgruntled Republicans who do not favor Mr. Hoover, convinced him that he should enter the Democratic contest.

They contend that he will prove more acceptable to the country than four years ago, when he polled nearly 16,000,000 votes.

Train Kills Boxer

South Bend, Ind., Feb. 12 (US)—Jogging along the railroad tracks to condition himself for a boxing bout, Len Heinrich, 28, a deaf mute and graduate of Gallaudet College, Washington, D. C., was killed instantly when hit by a Michigan Central train, it was reported today.

GIBBONS ON SCENE OF BATTLE ACTION

GOV. ROOSEVELT "OUT" HERE

Albany, Feb. 12 (INS)—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, as a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, may not enter the Massachusetts primaries in April, James A. Farley, Democratic state chairman and pre-convention campaign manager of the Governor, hinted today.

If Roosevelt fails to enter the Massachusetts primaries it might leave the field free to Gov. Al. Smith.

"I wouldn't say that Governor Roosevelt is going into the Massachusetts primaries," Farley said.

Roosevelt has never said he would go into any Bay State primaries but Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, after a recent conference with the Governor, announced he was planning to do so. At that time, however, Smith had not tossed his brown derby into the presidential ring.

BYRD STRICTLY "NEUTRAL"

New York, Feb. 12 (US)—Former Governor Harry F. Byrd, Virginia's hope for the Democratic nomination for President, has eliminated himself from the anti-Roosevelt bloc the New York executive's foes are attempting to build among favorite sons.

After a half-hour talk here with former Governor Smith and a conference with National Chairman Raskob, Byrd announced:

"I want to emphasize that I am not fighting Roosevelt or anybody else."

He insisted his visit to Raskob was to discuss progress of plans to maintain a permanently active organization between elections. He called on Smith he said, "to pay my respects." Nevertheless, the talk between Smith and Byrd did center on convention aspects.

By way of emphasizing his neutrality as between Smith and Roosevelt he revealed his day's engagements, before returning South, included a talk with State Chairman Farley, director of Roosevelt's pre-convention campaign.

PROBE SCORED BY ROOSEVELT

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 12—A Republican legislative investigation of all state departments was characterized by Governor Roosevelt, Democratic candidate for the presidential nomination, as "insincere."

The Republican proponents called it an effort to determine governmental costs and reduce them, and their Democratic legislative opponents referred to the anticipated effort as a "brazen piece of politics." The Senate authorized the inquiry. The Assembly will act Monday.

"I would welcome any non-political investigation in the open," said the governor. "But in their debate they (Republican majority spokesmen) created a perfectly false atmosphere by saying they want to find out things about the budget. There is nothing they can't find out coming down here or picking up the telephone and have the department heads come before them.

"History shows that political investigations generally are boomerangs."

Farewell to Wallace

Hollywood, Feb. 12 (US)—Hollywood friends of Edgar H. Wallace, famous British novelist and playwright, said farewell to him last night at brief memorial services. The services were arranged by officials of RKO-Radio Studios.

BIAS CHARGED JUDD JURORS

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 12 (US)—Move No. 1 in the efforts to save the life of Mrs. Winnie Ruth Judd, convicted trunk slayer, began to take shape today after attorneys announced they would ask for a new trial on the grounds that one or more members of the jury had definite opinions on the case before hearing the evidence.

At least one of the jurors, it was learned from sources close to the defense, is said to have voiced a definite desire to "hang Mrs. Judd" before his name was even drawn in the trial.

Affidavits said to be supporting this claim were made here and turned over to defense attorneys.

Mrs. Judd's defenders also are endeavoring to obtain additional affidavits from citizens who say the jurors were allowed to hear women on the streets shout to them instructions to "hang Mrs. Judd"

DOLLAR SHOWS DROP IN PARIS EXCHANGE

Paris, Feb. 12 (AP)—The American dollar dropped on the Paris Exchange today from yesterday's quotation of 25.40 francs to 25.35, American bankers announced.

Emphasizing that the drop had no relation to the Glass-Steagall banking bill, introduced in the American Congress yesterday, American circles explained that the drop was attributable to a change in minting charges.

They said the Bank of France had increased the gold minting charge from 22 francs per kilo to 44 francs per kilo operative on February 15.

The Bourse opened strong this morning, following yesterday's rise in Wall Street, and as a further effect of the American credit extension plan.

French financial experts said this afternoon that the success or failure of the new American plan depends upon the Americans themselves.

The prevailing view in France is that the United States will come through because of its inherent energy and courage.

The financial writer in the Paris Midi said the congressional proposal modifies the status of the dollar, and Europe and creditors may be tempted to withdraw their dollar holdings.

"The United States," he wrote, has decided to place additional funds at the disposition of banks in peril, but this substitutes a peril to the dollar for the peril to the banks."

BEST CONTRACT HANDS

A series of selections by bridge stars of the best illustrations in their careers of precise bidding and excellent play. No. 5—Oswald Jacoby.

New York, Feb. 12 (AP)—Oswald Jacoby, master of psychic bids, who is a sound bidder as well, and an excellent player always, once bid a grand slam, when vulnerable, and made it by a triple squeeze. The hand is the one which gave him the greatest thrill of his career in contract bridge. It increased his total in a social game by 2340 points.

The hand:

The players: Mrs. I. H. Stengel, North; Oswald Jacoby, dealer; South; Walter Malowan, West; Theodore A. Lightner, East.

NORTH
♠—A 10 9 8
♡—6
♢—K 7 6 2
♣—A K 10 2

WEST
♠—Q 7 6
♡—4 2
♢—J 9 8
♣—Q J 9 8 7

EAST
♠—J 5 4
♡—K 10 9 8 7 5
♢—4
♣—6 5 3

SOUTH (Dealer)
♠—K 3 2
♡—A Q J 3
♢—A Q 10 5 3
♣—4

The bidding under the one-over-one system was as follows: South one diamond; West pass; North, one spade; East pass; South, two hearts; West, pass; North, six diamonds; East, pass; South, seven diamonds.

The play.

Trick	West	North	East	South
1	Q C	Cx
2	2 H	6 H	3 C	4 C
3	4 H	2 Dx	5 H	A Hx
4	6 S	8 S	7 H	3 H
5	8 D	K Dx	4 S	K Sx
6	7 C	A Cx	8 H	Q H
7	9 D	6 D	5 C	2 S
8	J D	7 D	4 D	Q Dx
9	8 C	9 S	9 H	A Dx
10	9 C	2 C	6 C	10 Dx
			10 H	5 Dx

The cards held then were:

NORTH
♠—A 10

♢—None
♣—10

WEST
♠—Q 7

♢—None
♣—J

EAST
♠—J 5

SOUTH

♡—J
♢—3
♣—None

On the lead of the trey of diamonds west had to discard a spade to keep the high club. North, therefore, discarded the ten of clubs. East had to discard a spade to keep the high heart. Jacoby then took the last two tricks with the spades in dummy.

The possibilities of the squeeze were apparent to Jacoby after the lead of the queen of clubs, indicating that Malowan held also the knave and the nine spot. It would have been possible to finesse hearts once, but if the finesse failed, the contract was immediately defeated. Besides, the expert does not risk a finesse when there is a more certain method.

The vulnerable grand slam counted 1500 points, seven diamonds 140 and rubber 700.

MAID'S SISTER SHARES ESTATE OF BROKER

New York, Feb. 12 (INS)—The secret marriage of Louis Casimir De Coppet, member of the New York Stock Exchange, to Mlle. Geradot of Paris, sister of a housemaid in the De Coppet family, in January, 1930, came to light in surrogate court when the secret bride put in a claim for a widow's dowry of the estate.

According to an affidavit Mme. De Coppet forwarded from Paris she came to New York to visit her sister, Lucienne, the De Cappet maid.

Six months after the death of Mrs. Adele De Coppet, in 1926, the widow swore, De Coppet began courting her. They were married in Rheims January 11, 1930. He was 59 and she 24. Their honeymoon lasted but 13 days and De Coppet returned to New York after warning her to keep their marriage secret.

A year later, the affidavit claims, De Coppet, hurrying to a reunion with his secret bride, was stricken and died.

Surrogate Foley ruled that, by the terms of an earlier testament the young widow was entitled to $150,000 instead of $100,000 she would get by a widow's dower.

tiara, or triple crown. He raised his right hand occasionally to bless the shouting people, who were kept back by wooden barriers lined with papal gendarmes.

The Pope was preceded in procession by a detachment of the Swiss guards, another of the noble guards, then prelates of the Vatican and finally a score of cardinals in purple.

As the Pontiff was carried up the central aisle the Sistine Choir chanted "Tu Es Petrus," (Thou Art Peter). The crimson attendants bore him to the large throne to the left of the altar. He left the portable throne and ascended the dias.

The cardinals advanced one by one, knelt and kissed his hand. Then Cardinal Locatelli, the first cardinal created by the Pope, celebrated the mass.

GIVES BLESSING

When the mass, which lasted about an hour, ended, the Pope gave his benediction. Then he again ascended the sedia gestatoria and was borne back through the rows of cheering people.

Doubtless the Pontiff's memory went back to the day 10 years ago today when 50,000 persons cheered him during the ceremonies in St. Peter's as he was crowned Pope and officially began his reign.

On that day, a Sunday, he entered St. Peter's in an imposing procession. According to the ritual, flax was solemnly burned before his throne, while the warning, sic transit gloria mundi (thus passes away the glory of the world) was recited.

The French cardinal Billot performed the coronation ceremony. Several years later arose the Pope's conflict with the Catholic Royalists of France, the Action Francaise movement; Cardinal Billot protested, it is said, against the Pope's severe attitude, and then resigned—the first cardinal to resign in many generations.

ENVOYS AT MASS.

He retired as a simple priest to the Jesuit Monastery of Ariccia, and there died only two months ago.

Ambassadors and ministers of 33 nations who have formal relations with the Vatican sat in the diplomats' benches today. Others present included priests and students of the American College in Rome.

Donna Rachele Mussolini, wife of the Premier, sat for the first time in the diplomatic box in company with Ambassador De Vecchi, Italian envoy to the Vatican.

During his 10 years in the Papacy, Pope Pius has received in audience an average of 300 persons daily.

He devotes eight hours a day to this task alone, seeing members of his staff, foreign and domestic ecclesiastic functionaries and pilgrims from all parts of the world in private or public audience as the particular case warrants.

GREETS HUNDREDS

His official vacation period, from mid-August to mid-October, is no more than a name. He goes on receiving during all that time, starting at 9 in the morning and finishing at 8 in the evening, with three hours off for the lunch period.

The audiences are divided into four classes: The "tabella," receptions of heads of congregations and members of the staff; the private audiences for visiting ecclesiastics and other personages; the special audiences of ecclesiastics and prominent laymen, who have no specified subject to discuss, and the group audiences for pilgrims.

SHIPS HALT IN FOG, 1 AGROUND

Shipping was at a standstill in the thick fog covering sea and land today, while transportation on highways, rail and electric lines was delayed.

The steamer Robert E. Lee, due to sail from New York for Boston, last night remained at its pier, and other coastwise vessels delayed sailings.

The coast guard patrol boat Faunce arrived with Kieran Sheehan of Union st., Boston, an injured fisherman, after being delayed outside the harbor for hours in its race to port from the trawler Flow, at the fishing banks. He was taken to Chelsea Marine Hospital.

The coast guard destroyer Porter, from New London, placed a line aboard the Veedol II., tanker which had run aground on Prudence Island in Narragansett Bay, earlier today, and was to attempt to pull her clear at high tide this afternoon.

The city today had 1000 public works department employes and 900 men from the public welfare department, with 130 trucks, removng snow and ice. At 2 p. m. 500 unemployed from the municipal employment bureau were to go to work.

American Hospital Suffers

Paris, Feb. 12—The American Hospital in Paris, too, has been hit by the dropping off of contributions from wealthy Americans. So, like the rest of the world, the hospital has embarked on a severe economy program.

Papal Ceremony is Marred as Man Is Ejected at Mass

Vatican City, Feb. 12—A slight incident marred the beginning of the colorful ceremony at the 10th anniversary mass of Pope Pius today.

As the Pope was being carried along the central nave on the way to St. Peter's a man threw a sheet of foolscap paper at the Pontiff, at the same time shouting, "I want grace!"

The sheet dropped in front of the sedia gestatoria, or portable thront, and was picked up by an attendant.

His Holiness paid no attention to the incident. Two pontifical gendarmes ejected the man.

Hoover Invited for "Tolerance" Parley

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—An attempt to eradicate prejudices caused by religious differences will be made at a conference here March 7 to be attended by hundreds of prominent Catholics, Protestants and Jews.

President Hoover has been invited to open the meeting. Speakers will include Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, Roger W. Straus of New York, Prof. Carlton J. H. Hayes of New York and Bishop James E. Freeman of Washington.

TWO STUDENTS NOT YET FOUND

Buoyed by hopes from Montreal, the anxious families of two missing Harvard students clung to their beliefs that Floyd Stewart and Nathaniel E. Jones would return from their "lark" today.

The students, missing from Harvard School of Business Administration since January 31, were reported traced to the Canadian city through a pawned fur coat and the report of an overheard conversation that they were en route back to school.

In his room at Hotel Statler, Joseph Stewart of Garden City, Kan., father of one boy, spent a sleepless night telephoning Montreal for information and calling his Kansas home to reassure the student's mother, who is distracted.

Both parents of the Jones youth were in a state of collapse at the family home in Billerica.

23 'BOOKIES' ROBBED

ONE DONS MASK

Their three confederates drifted casually into the building, but as they mounted the stairs, one donned a mask.

His two partners remained unmasked and one was recognized as the paroled state prison inmate, a former hijack specialist.

The two unmacked men entered the betting joint, allaying suspicion by their idle manner, until they had surveyed the situation. Then the action started.

Both pulled out revolvers and, as they barked a command to everybody in the place to back against the wall, hands in the air, their comrade appeared in the doorway wearing a mask.

TAKE EVERY DOLLAR

There he remained with a blue steel revolver, .45 calibre, leveled at the occupants, while the others put their guns away and began, swiftly and thoroughly, to go through the pockets of their victims.

They didn't miss a dollar. When they were through, all in the joint were cleaned out, and a little money that was in a desk drawer was also scooped up and carried away.

One customer of the place lost as little as $4, but on the other hand the chief operator donated $1620 to the gayety of the robber gang's Valentine celebration.

During the robbery, the battery of six telephones used for taking bets rang insistently as it was the busiest part of the afternoon, with races on at Hialeah, Havana and New Orleans.

But the robbers would let nobody answer the phones. One customer, eager to lay a bet on a "red hot tip" and unable to reach the place by telephone, appeared in person and contributed a little more to the robbers' haul.

The three gunmen then left the building as casually as they entered and strolled to the parked machine. They found their two pals changing a tire which had gone flat. They waited until it was changed, knowing the police would not be called.

Then all five sped away toward the North End.

A spy, sent out by the operators of the booking joint, watched them from a doorway and reported back to his employers.

2 GIRLS CAUGHT RUNNING RUM

Portsmouth, N. H., Feb. 12—Two girls running a load of liquor in a roadster were seized on the Lafayette highway here today by the customs patrol.

They identified themselves as Gladys Allen and Elma Labar, both of Bangor, Me. They were arrested and held in $1000 each for hearing in federal court at Concord in April and the roadster and 168 bottles of brandy, rum, gin and alcohol were confiscated.

Sagging rear springs attracted the attentian of Customs Officers Eastman and Sagar as the car entered Portsmouth from Rye. The girls were indignant when the officers requested permission to peek under the deck of the rumble seat.

"We have nothing in this car," said one. "You certainly don't think we would carry liquor! Why, we haven't even had the back of the car open since we got it."

"Well," said Eastman, "let's air it out."

3 ROB CHELSEA MAN IN HIS YARD

Right in his own back yard, in broad daylight today, Morris Gilman of 156 Garfield ave., Chelsea, was robbed of $75 and his automobile by three bandits.

Gilman, proprietor of a meat market in Washington ave., Chelsea, was backing out of his garage when three young men, each about 20, stepped up to the car. One thrust a revolver through the open window.

Gilman stopped his machine and one bandit stepped in beside him and took the money from his pocket. Two checks were also taken.

The victim was then ordered out and the robbers backed his car out of the driveway and sped up Garfield ave. in the direction of Revere. An hour later the car was found abandoned in Calhoun ave., Everett.

The boldness of the robbery left police figuratively gasping. Gilman's wife was in bed and did not witness it. There were several persons in the house next door and a number passing by in Garfield ave. on their way to work.

Police believe at least one of the bandits knew Gilman was accustomed to taking a substantial sum of money from his home to his store each day.

Two other holdups in Chelsea last night are believed to have been perpetrated by two of the trio that robbed Gilman. Samuel Meyers was held up and robbed of $25 by two young gunmen in his store in Grove st. and the same pair robbed Samuel Pearlston of $50 in his Shurtleff st. drugstore.

MRS. MASSIE TO TELL ALL

that Mrs. Massie has completely recovered from the maltreatment of her assailants, who broke her jaw in two places and beat her body black and blue.

SAVE OTHER GIRLS

She has, however, regained much of her former vivacity and again looks upon the world as a worthwhile place to live in. A swollen and scarred jaw is the only visible mark of her brutal punishment.

"Going to court again and testifying to the incidents of that terrible night is a horrifying thought," she said, "but if my disclosures will in any way save other girls from a similar experience and awaken Honolulu's long dormat public conscience. I feel that the end will justify the means.

"I realize that my unhappy plight has focused world attention on the Ala Moana cases and aroused officials to appreciation of the rottenness of the community's law enforcement conditions.

"I know that out of the present turmoil some good must come, because people's hearts are usually found in the right place.

HER MISSION IN LIFE

"That is my mission and duty—to tell again my story in the hope that the full horror of it will bring lasting reforms to Honolulu and make the city safe for all women.

"There is no punishment the courts could inflict upon my assailants which would in any way compensate me for my suffering. Honolulu's incredible laxity toward sex offenses is responsible for my attack and the assault on a young white woman early in January by an escaped Hawaiian convict.

"If the laws had been keenly and rigorously enforced in the past and proper punishment inflicted no one would have dared to assail us."

Sitting in her husband's comfortable cabin on the Alton's second deck, where she spends most of the daylight hours with the lieutenant and his mother, Mrs. Massie discussed the forthcoming trial of the four defendants.

INCENSED AT RUMORS

She said the general belief prevails that no decision is likely but expressed conviction that such an opinion was erroneous and that justice would be meted out.

Mrs. Massie denied reports that another woman was with her on the night of the assault, and commented with some bitterness on the cruel slander circulated about her in Honolulu shortly after the incidents of the attack became public.

"The character of that talk," she said, "was one of the most shameful incidents of the situation, but fortunately all decent people discredited the reports. I don't know, of course, how much effect they had on the jury."

Reconstructing the story of the fateful night, Mrs. Massie said she entertained friends at home in the early part of the evening, and later all went to the Ala Wai Inn, where they had dinner and danced.

SEIZED BY FIVE MEN

At about 11:30 p. m., "feeling bored and tired," she said, Mrs. Massie left the inn alone for a brief walk in the fresh air. After a few yards she crossed a bridge and turned into John Ena rd. She had proceeded only a short distance when an automobile bearing five men halted.

Two got out and seized and struck her, she said, and the next thing she knew was in the back seat of the car with three of the men, the other two were in the frnot seat.

"They were holding me," she said, recounting the story with emotion, "and every time I spoke they would strike me.

"I offered them what little money I had in my bag, promising that more would be paid by my husband if I were released. They took my bag and my money.

"They hit me many times to stifle my cries for help and kept choking me. Finally the car turned off into the brush at the side of Ala Moana boulevard and I was dragged from the car for about 30 feet.

"After that—it was too hideous."

Mrs. Massie was asked if any one of the five men were more brutal than the others.

"Yes," she said, "Kahahawai was the most beatial and cruel. It was he who broke my jaw."

The pretty blonde victim said that light from the street lamps during the abduction offered ample illumination to enable her later to identify completely four of the five assailants. The only one about whom she was uncertain was the Japanese David Takai, and he admitted to police he had been in the company of the other defendants that night.

MANY LETTERS.

Mrs. Massie said that she, the lieutenant and her mother were receiving letters daily from all parts of the world, many coming from England, where she spent pleasant vacation times in Devonshire during her Belgian school days.

Lieut. Massie entered the cabin toward the close of the interview. Attired in the white uniform of a lieutenant in the subrarine service, he stood smilingly by while Mrs. Massie recounted her story, telling of how she was married at the age of 16 and revealing that her recreation, even in these troublous times, consists of swimming, tennis, an occasional bridge game and much reading of popular magazines and best-seller novels. She remarked with pride that both her and her husband's families are of British descent.

"Some day I know," she said, "that Tommy, my mother and I in less distressing circumstances will look back on the incidents of that terrible September night and tragic January morning as more of a nightmare than an awful reality.

"All of us are facing the world unafraid, and although we must pass through unpleasant ordeals ahead, we are confident that in the end justice will be found on our side. We all want to go home and be with old friends so we can forget our tragedies."

CANNON FREED OF "SLUSH" INDICTMENT

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—The District of Columbia Supreme Court today sustained the demurrers of Bishop James Cannon, Jr and his former secretary, Miss Ada Burroughs, to their indictments on charges of violating the corrupt practices act

The churchman and Miss Burroughs were indicted on charges they had failed to file complete reports of expenditures made in their activities against Alfred E. Smith in the 1928 campaign

Their demurrer disputed the constitutionality of the corrupt practices act which requires that such reports be filed with the clerk of the House of Representatives.

In sustaining the demurrer, the court held it was unnecessary to pass upon the constitutionality of the act, but that the indictment was defective in failing to charge that Miss Burroughs had knowledge of contributions made to Cannon by E. C Jameson, a New York insurance man

Suspect Held on Woman's Charge

Charles E. O'Neill of Edgar ave pleaded not guilty to charges of drunkenness and assault and battery on Mrs. Philomena Rosetti in Somerville District Court, and his case was continued until next Monday for trial. Bail was fixed at $600.

Mrs. Rosetti and her daughter, Miss Minnie Rosetti 18, were walking on Broadway near Cross st Somerville when they were accosted by a man Later on Cross st near Pearl st., a man jumped out of an automobile and slapped Mrs Rosetti on the face Sergt. Hugh Cunningham arrested O Neill

CHINA APPEALS FOR ACTION BY FULL LEAGUE

Geneva, Feb 12 (INS)—China today called upon the League of Nations Council to convoke the assembly in extraordinary session for [illegible] against Japan

After consulting diplomats of other nations here for the disarmament conference W. W. Yen, Chinese delegate handed to the league secretariat a formal letter containing the request

This is the first time in the League's history that such action has been taken and is prompted by China's belief that many small powers not represented on the council would be far more sympathetic toward her demands for [illegible] upon Japan than were France, Great Britain and other [illegible] powers on the council.

It was [illegible] there was no way to escape calling the assembly unless Yen could be induced to withdraw his demand

"The League would suffer another body blow," said one prominent diplomat, "if Japan, after defying the council, should also ignore efforts of the full assembly to bring about peace."

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

By LOUIS SOBOL

From the Envelopes!

From my Hollywood deputy "Dear Louis, an interesting sidelight on Maxwell Anderson is the story they're telling here. He was brought to the coast last year, you know, to write originals for Metro, receiving the neat sum of $50.00. A little later the company wanted to use a scene from his play, 'Elizabeth the Queen,' for 'The Guardsmen' and approached the author carefully to find out how much he would accept for it. In reply Anderson wrote a carefully worded letter to the effect that since the company not only had paid him fifty grand for nothing (he never wrote a line for the company) but had also provided a typewriter and an office where he wrote all of 'Elizabeth the Queen,' he felt that it would be no more than decent if he permitted them to use the scene free of charge—and they did." . . . From Philip N. Schuyler sales promotion supervisor of the Postal Telegraph: "Verses manufactured for all occasions is one of the latest undertakings of the Postal Telegraph Company. The other day, for instance, the following verse was composed for a customer planning a Valentine party 'Come one, come all on Valentine's Day—With Grace and Louis to gambol and play—From four to seven, Park Ten-Eighty-eight—Please come early and stay very late—On a sea of love with Cupid we'll sail—And will drown all blues in a tasty cocktail.'"

Larry Alexander special-delivers a Chinese story: "Ling Foo read Monday that five Japs and 120 Chinese were killed in the fighting. Tuesday's account disclosed casualties of 12 Japs and 420 Chinese. Wednesday brought word that 37 Japs and 814 Chinese had been exterminated. That was too much for Ling Foo. Raising his hands to the high heavens, he screamed, 'Pitty soon no more Japs left.'" . . . Oh, well, you can expect almost anything from the envelopes . . . La Belle Rose, with the aid of a typist and evidently a publicity agent to guide her faltering mind, writes by way of apology: "The other night when you were at the Nut Club you seemed offended because I tried to kiss you. Mr. Sobol, please, I kissed all the other gentlemen that night and I don't see why you should be an exception. Anyhow, I'm all fed up on working at the Nut Club and would rather fight than keep on there, where they don't appreciate me and my art. I'd like to go to Shanghai, but I guess they wouldn't let me fight; but at least I could sing for the soldiers like I did in France. Maybe that would end the war." . . . From the embittered Harold M. Bone, of New Haven: "Regarding the recent paragraph about publishing 'Voice of Broadway' pieces in book form: Most of us would rather see the author himself between covers — hard, wooden covers'"

"Just to make you feel proud and great about how smart you are," purrs D. V., "I want to remind you that you clapped calloused mitts for Russell Rhodes, as the butler in 'The Bride the Sun Shines On' right after it opened. Well, the February issue of the Theater Guild magazine in an article entitled, 'A Playgoer's Afterthoughts,' has this to say 'Every season is distinguished by splendid performances in minor roles, which, although they do much to keep play-going an exciting and fructifying experience, are generally overlooked. Here, then, is a list, by no means complete, of such players as have distinguished themselves in bits since last summer Frank Conlan and Russell Rhodes in "The Bride the Sun Shines On." the clergyman and butler respectively, of the comedy, whose performances are supremely comic etc., etc. The point is this, Louis The producer of the company never put Rhodes' name up on his house signs when it was at the Fulton and omitted it when every other member of the speaking cast was listed in press notices, and put girls of the 'walk on' bridesmaid group out among the pictures rather than use his. Rhodes was the only actor in the cast omitted from any representation whatever on house signs, posters, etc. Things have changed since the play has come under the wing of the Leblang interest, but what do you make of all of this. . . I should mix up in the affairs of your actors, God forbid

An ambitious fellow, John Earsch of Brooklyn: "I am a fish peddler," he admits with all due modesty, "but business is bad, so I am turning to the song-writing racket and am enclosing some of my songs. What do you think of them?" . . . I should say, Earsch stick to your fish peddling. Your fish, at least, if you know your business, are salable . . . The Messrs. Reis and Dunn offer a few contributions to the Hollywood Producers' Dictionary.

Amethyst: Man without religion.
Anon: Convent inmate.
Distinguish: To put out.
Maneuver: Fertilizer.
Haddock: What you have the morning after Destitute. A bad woman.
Turquoise: What you eat with cranberries on Thanksgiving.
Welkin Door-mat inscription

"You know," writes Gene Richards, worriedly, "nothing impresses me so deeply as hearing Kate Smith sing 'Why Not Take All of Me?' So, I find this a good time to say that of all the hypocrites and contradictionists of New York, song-pluggers take the stuffed turkey. In one song we hear a fellow insist that one moon is the best in the world. The same fellow writes another song about the same moon, but in a different place, and tells us nothing like it. Yet, there's probably more passion in a New York moon and under it, but does anyone sigh about the good old Manhattan moon? One fellow insists life is a bowl of cherries, and a million torch singers go into a fit of lamentation and sob, 'Why not take all of me?' Another guy asks 'Was that the human thing to do?' So, somebody pipes up and truthfully croons 'It's still the same old story, as life goes on and time goes by.' 'I'm through with love,' says another, and the next minute sings 'What's the use of living without love?' What's it all about?" . . . Not a thing, keed, except space filler for Mr. Sobol.

"Who?" asks L. Edwards, frantically "Is that rather short fellow you see almost every night around Broadway—usually near the Palace Theater—who has a big pad and pencil and keeps scribbling away constantly? He looks like a madman to me" . . . Why Edwards from your description, I wouldn't be surprised if the fellow you mean were I . . . "I never knew until yesterday," writes John J Smith, of Charlestown, Mass., "that you are an ex-lyric writer . . . Say that with a smile, mister! . . . A copy of O. O. McIntyre's new book, "Another Old Book," in which he resurrects his statement of several years ago 'The idea that columning requires special gifts is one of the magnificent myths of the trade. Most of us took it up as people take up soliciting life insurance—after everything else we tried was a flop" . . . Speak for yourself, O. O. As for me I was one of the best tie salesmen Gimbel's ever paid out $22 a week to, back in 1919.

BEACON HILL

Betty Alden

DO YOU KNOW . . . ? THAT MRS. THOMAS C THACHER JR who was the lovely Vera Morgan from New York, residing at 75 Pinckney st., and Mrs. Connie Hutchins, the former Gertrude Amory, are representatives in Boston for two princesses who are THE smart interior decorators of New York. Mrs Hutchins uses her house in Needham as a show room to display the perfectly intriguing Russian, French and English antiques and Oriental fabrics used in their art. What optimists! If these charming ladies could get a birdseye view of New England interiors, particularly Beacon Hill, they would be down and die of Victorian blues.

• • •

That the celebrated Emily Post is the sister-in-law of Mrs. George Post, who in turn is the sister of Mrs. Joseph Woods Sr. of West Cedar st. That Mrs. George Post is visiting her charming sister for a few weeks.

• • •

That Mr. and Mrs. Alden Thorndike have been visiting their married daughter Helen, in California and report plenty of snow on the West coast.

That Potter Palmer gave his beautiful bride, Rose Movius, a diamond wrist watch as a wedding gift. That they are basking in the Florida sunshine right now.

• • •

A Charming Hostess

THAT WE HAD TEA WITH CLAUDIA MUZIO THE other afternoon and she is even more beautiful off of the stage than on it—that she wears her hair in a long cloudy bob, her skin is creamy-white and her eyes are very dark and brilliant. We had the pleasure of meeting her charming husband, an Italian man of letters, and VERY handsome. They are both cultured and refined to a degree not always found in artists. Madame Muzio was delighted with an affectionate telegram and huge bouquet of roses received from Geraldine Farrar that afternoon. Our Gerry sat in Mr. Charles Ellis' box during the first week of opera and applauded the artists with the sincerest enthusiasm.

Red Tulips

DAUGHTER WAS SO ENAMORED of the Muzio that she [illegible] perfectly quiet during the [illegible] time. We thought we were going to be very late for the tea, we went into a dinky little flower shop for a few flowers to present to the great prima donna and it took her so long to decide on long-stemmed red tulips we almost had [illegible]

• • •

Likes Long Walks

THAT MADAME MUZIO is easy and natural to talk with. Boston weather was a little disappointing, but her apartment overlooks the Charles river and in spite of the rain it was quite cheerful up there. That she eats only one meal a day, that one at mid day; that, contrary to the routine of some prima donnas, she arises at eight in the morning and does not lie down during the day, taking long walks when she can arrange it. [illegible] a vital personality with an inner calmness. You feel you are in the presence of a great artist. She discussed the various operas, especially La Boheme, at length.

• • •

Lives Her Roles

HER PROGRAM IS ALWAYS the same the day that she sings. She arrives at the opera house at five, sees that her maid has her gowns and accessories ready and then throws herself into her part until it is time for the rise of the curtain. No one speaks to her. She lives Mimi or whatever part it is for hours before she goes on. You feel, when you hear her talk about it, that she thoroughly understands the different characters she portrays, knows their history and feels a deep responsibility to her public in portraying them convincingly. We are grateful we have found a star to worship in the opera.

Afterthoughts

A BUNCH OF ENTHUSIASTIC BOYS comparing tattooed marks at the Charity Poverty ball. Quite a group came as sailors and even went so far as to [illegible] for the torture of the needle to look the part. Bill Chamberlain trying to look unconcerned about the betting bill which had its first hearing Tuesday. He asked us if we were at the State House, to which we replied that with Bayard Tuckerman and Mr. Chamberlain there we knew we would only be excess baggage. If they can't put it across no one can. Bob Amory doing a Boy Scout act by helping with the cameras and every one to have a good time generally. There's a man who wants to carry his soul. His own having our fortune told by the gypsy at the ball told us we were too generous for our own good. [illegible] unemployment relief committee, we should have been a genius in something but just missed. She doesn't know the half of it and we haven't always missed either. We are going to live to a ripe old age—the riper the better.

Military Idea Carried Out in Modes

By DOROTHY ROE

New York, Feb. 12 (US)—The canny spring coat hunter will be cheered no end by the gay and military-minded new coats of corduroy, velveteen, suede and light weight wool.

They are entirely martial, the new coats, with broad shoulders, slim waists, brass buttons and diagonal fastenings like their khaki predecessors of wartime days. But they are much more interesting in the varied new fabrics and the new high colors.

You may have a spring coat of red, white or blue velveteen this spring.

Or you may be military in banana beige or ivory corduroy.

Little capes and military braid add finishing touches to these frivolous regimentals, the trim lines of which are so flattering to most figures.

Even trench coats have gone pretentious on us, and now are being shown in all the new colors and the new fabrics, corduroy and velveteen included. This brand of velveteen has a twill back which prevents the pile from rubbing, and is reported to be highly durable.

A new lightweight wool with a pile like uncut velvet also is a high favorite for spring coats and coat dresses.

Two-color coats also have been spotted among the late arrivals from Paris. An interesting example is a coat combining gray with a yoke effect and collar of brown.

The popularity of checks is evidenced in coats as well as in blouses and dresses.

Books—And a Number of Things

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

How well Mary Roberts Rinehart knows her stuff! You remember The Door, of course, and how its eerie atmosphere held you to the last page, how it sent shivers down your spine and you could scarcely wait for the solution of the mystery.

Now comes Miss Pinkerton (Farrar & Rinehart), which deals with a young nurse who is really employed by headquarters to help in solving baffling puzzles. That is [illegible] name was Miss Adams. She was known as Miss Pinkerton. She ferreted things out, and though sometimes [illegible] for something to be [illegible] was not yet she [illegible] her work fascinated her [illegible] might [illegible] relationship with her patient [illegible] much that could not have been earned otherwise and often in ways that were [illegible]

Mrs. Rinehart never wastes much time in setting her stage. She plunges the reader immediately into the heart of a mystery and manages to make her feel it. She makes him see the lonely old house set in trees in a [illegible] city, though there are no lengthy descriptions of it.

But soon we enter the mansion with Miss Pinkerton and the mystery; we find an aristocrat is there lying in a great mahogany bed; the ancient servitors move about in the semi-darkness; strange shapes appear on darkened stairs; there is a dead man in the third floor [illegible] by an unknown hand or [illegible] It is all uncanny, with footprints on the lawn and troops of detectives searching about, following this or that clue.

• • •

Mrs. Rinehart was once a nurse herself, as everyone knows who read "My Story" over a year ago. Therefore Miss Pinkerton is a living breathing person. She administers the correct medicines and her orderly days are recorded with precision and truth. She [illegible] the reader is led off on wrong trails. She has her suspicions from the moment she takes her case.

One person after another, in the good old fashioned way, is thought to be guilty of the murder of old Miss Mitchell's nephew. I thought once or twice in the course of the narrative that I had laid my finger on the right character, but I was not half so clever as I imagined I was. He or she slipped away in most tantalizing fashion and I had to begin all over again. But I had a mighty good time and when the final unraveling of the threads was done by Mrs. Rinehart's expert hand I marveled at her ingenuity.

This is as expert a job of story telling in this field as one could wish to find. There isn't a flaw in it so far as I could discover. It is as cleverly manipulated as "The Bat," and that is saying much. You will have two hours of enjoyment if you pick up "Miss Pinkerton."

• • •

Another kind of excitement will come to you if you read "Memoirs of a Soldier of Fortune," by Gen. Rafael de Nogales, published by Harrison Smith. But this, of course, is not fiction, it is fact. It is not an autobiography in the true sense of the word, but the glowing story of a soldier of fortune in many strange lands, told with spirit and fire.

Born a Venezuelan, Nogales has always been an enthusiast for liberty. He says of himself:

"During my life I have fought under many flags and many moons, including the crescent moon of Islam. I have considered myself a citizen of the world in all parts of the world where something was going on: a dictator to be overthrown, an army of patriots to be organized and led, a gold boom to be ridden, a whale to be harpooned, a political injustice to be uncovered and presented naked to the world."

The liberation of Venezuela was his fundamental passion, but things move too slowly down there for this man of action. He had to get out and fight other causes. The Mexican border called him. Alaska and Nevada lured him. In the jungles, in Turkey, in the Caribbean he found the thrills he sought, and his adventures were extraordinary. He fought against us in the Spanish-American War. I think anyone would call his a full life, without reservations.

• • •

Something tells me that this soldier of fortune would not be afraid to face any destiny that awaits him. He has never had time to think of living. He has lived. And he tells of his adventures without that swank he could so easily have assumed.

GOOD CLEAN FUN ON FINANCE WANTED
By GILBERT SELDES

ABANDONING, FOR THE MOMENT, his defense of the new humanists and his personal quarrels (on which he has wasted too much of his excellent talent), Mr. Gorham B. Munson sends me a hurry call for a humorist to do something about the financial situation. "Distress," he writes, "doesn't seem to quicken us to face our problems from a new angle, but humor might." Mr. Munson, like his teacher, A. R. Orage, is interested in the theories of the English major, C. H. Douglas, and moderately asks that the ideas of this unorthodox critic should be added to our stock. His proposals, according to an official statement, "do not involve sacrifice from anybody. They would abolish poverty without taking anything from the rich." If this sounds too millenial, the catch is quite evident: "The only change would be that the banks would lose their power to decide national and international policy." One suspects that the Douglas scheme would not appeal to bankers.

GILBERT SELDES

Belated Banking

"According to Douglas," Mr. Munson writes, "our fundamental trouble is a maladjustment of banking and industry, industry being advanced and banking being old-fashioned. It was a good banking system before the industrial revolution, but nowadays it is holding back progress." Like Keynes, Douglas believes that it is possible to abolish poverty altogether, and his disciples say "it is ridiculous to talk of overproduction while there are still people who want goods. What is wrong with the world is under-consumption." And the reason, as I gather it, is that money, which is only a device, has been raised by the banks into a sacred idol. That is, we think that money is wealth; but wealth is really not money; it is goods—things we have and things other people want.

For a Satirist

I do not know that this is a good libretto for a hilarious musical show, but Mr. Munson is right in looking about for a satirist—only he needs one who can think as well as be funny. Those who starve in the midst of plenty because (like Buridan's ass), they cannot make up their minds which bale of hay to eat, are half funny and half pitiable; but their leaders, who swing from wild cries of "Spend!" and "Buy Now" to "Slash Expenses" and "Economize," and then on to "Stop Hoarding" and then back to "Balance the Budgets," and who cry "No Dole!" and make billion dollar loans to banks—these people really need a few pinpricks. Or an even more slapstick form of correction.

Citizens' Complaint

Twenty-nine cordial shops (selling gin, whiskey and other liquors) were raided in New York last week "on complaint of citizens that they had become a nuisance because they stuffed mail boxes with price lists for liquors and forced their advertising literature on customers . . . They have even been putting their liquor prices into the hands of children."

I do not promise to proceed against chain grocery stores, various outlets, pawnshops, makers of vacuum cleaners and solicitors for indigent country clubs on the ground that they stuff my mail box. Their literature (as it is flatteringly and mistakenly called) is legal, though dull; and the bootlegger's price list, exciting and unbelievable, with gin at four bits a quart, is forbidden by law. I merely take the word of the prohibition enforcers that complaints came from citizens, and am trying to look the facts in the face, the first fact being that there are citizens so solicitous of the receptivity of their mail boxes that they would sacrifice a bootlegger to protect the postman.

Dry New York

This happened, moreover, in The Bronx, a section of the supposedly dripping city of New York, the birthplace of Al Smith, the sink of iniquity, the last stand of the demon rum, the only section of the country which—believe it because the drys ask you to believe it—really is asking for the restoration of the saloon. In New York, then, there are citizens so obedient to the law, so observant of their civil duties, that they become informers, send word to the enforcing arm and wreck the precarious business of the cordial shops. It is nothing for the repealers to laugh about; if they cannot present a solid front in New York their cause is lost.

One Little Doubt

One doubt lingers in my mind. Andrew J. McCampbell, Prohibition Administrator, shows himself a good judge of liquor when he says that the gin sold at or under a dollar a quart "is poor stuff and of low alcoholic content." Is it possible that the protesting citizens were more burned by bad gin than by bad morals? I imagine hundreds of parties to which half-welcome guests came bearing an offering of gin; there must be thousands of men who are not eagerly desired, but are asked because "Jim always brings a bottle." Until these cordial shops sprang into existence, the brought bottle was fairly trustworthy and all the stupid Jims were necessary additions to social cheer. Now they make their way into society at the cost of a dollar and the gin is foul. Naturally, the good citizens got together and, purely in self-defense, tipped off the enforcers.

PELLEY URGES TRUCKING CURB

Hartford, Ct., Feb. 12 (AP)—Divergent views on the need for regulating commercial vehicles were presented by John J. Pelley, president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and George H. Pride, president of the Pride Transportation Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"The experience of the past years has demonstrated that there is an urgent need for regulation which will prevent the unfair competition that now threatens public interest," Pelley asserted at the annual banquet of the transportation division of the Hartford Chamber of Commerce.

Pride, denying motor trucks do not pay their share of highway costs and criticizing control legislation, said the Interstate Commerce Commission was created only when the public "finally rose up in overwhelming wrath to protest against the railroads' secret rebates, preferential treatment and favoritism."

SORE THROAT

FIVE minutes after you rub on Musterole your throat should begin to feel less sore! Continue the treatment once every hour for five hours and you'll be astonished at the relief.

This famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other ingredients brings relief naturally. Musterole gets action because it is a "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

KIN OF ARMOUR TO WED SUITOR SHE SHOT

London Feb. 12 (AP)—The Daily Express said today that Alice Silverthorne, niece of Mrs. Ogden Armour and formerly the Comtesse Frederick de Janze, is to marry Raymond de Trafford whom she was charged with shooting in a train in 1927.

She was tried in France on the shooting charge and acquitted. Formal notice of the marriage would be given in Paris today, the newspaper said, and the wedding would take place within two weeks.

The Express recalled frequent rumors that Miss Silverthorne, who resumed her maiden name after her divorce in 1927 and Trafford were going to marry and that these were always denied. During the past four years the newspaper added Miss Silverthorne had traveled widely spending several months in Rhodesia Africa, had frequently met Trafford and had never renounced her affection for him.

Reports were current tw oyears ago that Trafford, youngest brother of Sir Humphrey Edmund de Trafford, and Miss Silverthorne, formerly of Chicago, were engaged to be married.

Miss Silverthorne shot him and herself in a compartment of a French train in 1927. She and Count de Janze were divorced in the same year.

Chicago Moves to Get 'Whoopee' Cash Back

Chicago, Feb. 12 (INS)—Plans were in progress today to recover part of the $5,000,000 lost through graft during the Chicago sanitary district "whoopee" era.

William Rothmann, attorney for the district, said he would obtain records of the recent trial of former district trustees to determine what employes received pay in return for no work and write asking them to make restitution. If they refuse, he will start suit.

NOVEL PLAN TO AID JOBLESS

The inauguration of a plan which will enable unemployed men and women to earn some money has been announced by Frank Barrabee, of the Barrabee Service Stores, Inc., distributors of Firestone batteries, tires and other products.

Service books, containing coupons describing services rendered at the Barrabee service stations, will be sold by the unemployed men and women for 25c, an advance payment which they keep. The buyer turns in his book at any Barrabee service station and is refunded the original payment of 25c on his or her first purchase. The coupons represent substantial savings on various merchandise in addition to the service rendered.

The plan has been endorsed by Edward M. Gallagher, acting mayor of Boston.

SENATE RELIEF VOTES MONDAY

Washington, Feb. 12 (AP)—Senate leaders agreed today to vote Monday on the various unemployment relief bills now pending.

Decision to defer the vote until Monday was made because many senators found it necessary to be out of town for the week-end.

The first vote probably will come on the Democratic substitute for the La Follette-Costigan bill. The substitute would provide for loans to states instead of outright gifts as carried by the original proposal.

Both bills now carry $750,000,000 to be divided equally between road construction and relief.

THIS IS LIFE

WORLD IS GOING TO MISS MONTHLY THRILL WITH EDGAR WALLACE GONE

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

ROBERT E. ROGERS

THE LENDING LIBRARIES, if they have any gratitude, ought to wear mourning this week for Edgar Wallace. If he did not create the recent tremendous flair for detective and mystery stories, he was its leading stimulus. His name was one of the most valuable trade marks in the world. He is supposed to have written more than 200 book-length stories, but everybody has lost count. He wrote at least a dozen of them a year, some times more. In addition, he could turn out six successful plays a year. His books sold at the rate of 5,000,000 a year, of which some 1,500,000 were sold in the United States. When you remember that it is estimated that the average American buys only two books a year, it looks as if Wallace sold more than his share.

In addition he was a racing expert and wrote a daily racing column, articles on the criminal world, managed his own theaters and ran for Parliament (unsuccessfully).

Plot Was the Thing With Him

Wallace was often compared to Dumas, the voluminous and indefatigable (except that Wallace apparently wrote all his books himself), but it seems to me that he was not unlike Charles Dickens as well. He was a cockney orphan, saved from the Workhouse by a Billingsgate fish pedlar. Like Dickens he worked at mean, casual jobs. Like Dickens' Oliver, he was a member of a boy gang of thieves. He tried to run away to sea but thought better of it, went into business, enlisted as a private soldier, went to South Africa as soldier and correspondent, met Kipling, and began to write. First, however, like Dickens, he educated himself. Like a locomotive, he gradually picked up speed until his really extraordinary stunts of rapid invention and instantaneous expression became to him a matter of course.

What was the secret of his popularity? I have, I suppose read at least one hundred of his two hundred thrillers. I doubt if I could remember the titles of more than two or three. That was one secret. You never bothered to remember titles. You simply asked for an Edgar Wallace. You knew that under that trade-mark you were sure of certain things. You were sure of really considerable ingenuity in plotting. Of course, in 200 titles there must be a considerable amount of repetition, but the skill with which Wallace worked his permutations and combinations of the 30 basic situations—or whatever number they are—was really uncanny.

No One Character Series for Him

You were pretty sure of getting a new chief character with every story. In a way I think that was a weakness of Wallace's. He will be remembered by no Sherlock Holmes, no Mr. Fortune, no Col. Gethryn, no Dr. Thorndike, no Philo Vance. A pity, for people remember characters rather than plots. In a few instances Wallace used a successful character in later books, but not often. But he invented, literally, dozens of different kinds of detectives, public and private, Scotland Yarders and country constables, romantic, humorous, grotesque and mysterious.

He sketched his people in broad, simple outlines, like the earlier Boz. They were mere types, of course, but usually amusing types. He had, like most English writers of detective fiction, a weakness for pale and persecuted young ladies, unconscious heiresses to great wealth. He liked comic underlings of the criminal world who possessed what collegians call "a line." He liked sinister rascals who possessed out-of-the-way country keeps or deserted mansions, honeycombed with secret passages, cellars, crypts, all heavily mined. He liked—oh, well, he liked all the stock in trade of conventional English mystery fiction, but he treated it all with a beautifully light touch. He kept the pulse racing and the pages turning and the reader in good humor all the while. Even his horror was light and pleasing. The real horror tale was not his style.

His best work, without question, was to be found in the comparatively sober tales of the underworld of London, in the slums or down along the waterfront. He apparently knew his London gangs pretty well, his dope smugglers and low-class cracksmen and the like. He knew his river police and his squad car work, the ordinary daily routine of the London police. Once he published in our press a very illuminating series of articles on the crime world of London, expressing his fears that the American gangster methods were already beginning to make English police work less efficacious than it had been. The British criminal, one gathered, did not carry a gun, any more than the police did. Neither of them had much chance, Wallace thought, against the hopped-up American gangster with a fast car and a habit of killing.

Just One Step From Genius

One got the impression that Wallace, like Dickens, was a born Londoner. He knew it and he loved it. He had the habit of throwing off, in his stride, little genre sketches, a bit of scenery, a Phil May kind of "character," a few lines of racy and accented dialogue, that might have nothing to do with the story, but which made it, for the moment, human and almost believable. In his early days as a writer he apparently tried South African yarns and all sorts of what might be called conventional or "legitimate" fiction. But the life got him. He loved to spin yarns and they swarmed in his head. So he spun them with an 1830 speed and carelessness and largesse, like Scribe and Dumas and the rest of them.

It is not impossible that by taking thought he might have added a considerable number of cubits to his stature. Between the artist and the pot-boiler the difference is often one not of talent or genius, but of care and intention. Wallace was quite as competent as many a high-brow writer, of slow production and exaggerated sense of his artistic importance. But he refused to take himself seriously. He spun yarns and wrote and produced plays reported racing and made breathless sums of money and died at 57.

Many people will miss the monthly Wallace book almost as they might miss an old acquaintance.

Tipsy Deb Cause of Raid on Club

ANXIOUS DAD TIPPED U. S. RAIDERS

Exclusive Speakeasy Put Ban on Woman Patrons Just a Week Too Late

The proprietors of the deluxe speakeasy in 153 Causeway st. raided yesterday and dismantled with the seizure of liquor and equipment valued at $10,000, today found themselves in the same position as the horse owner who locked the barn door after the horse was stolen.

Three weeks ago they had decided it was learned that it was for the best interests of their business to prohibit women from entering their establishment. The idea may have been a good one but it was about a week too late, subsequent events proved.

Their place was even then under surveillance by federal agents as the result of the complaint of an irate Beacon Hill father whose debutante daughter had paid the establishment a visit one evening and as a result arrived home early the next day in a hilarious condition. The father complained to Dennis T. Lordan, chief raiding officer of the federal forces and undercover investigation of the place was launched.

The place, known as the Cub Garden, was almost opposite the Boston Garden.

The five men arrested in the place gave their names as Louis Marion, of Saratoga st., East Boston, alleged proprietor; Joseph D. Stefano, of Washington st., Roxbury; Herbert Murphy, of Webster st., East Boston; James Polito, of Everett st., East Boston and Joseph Lanes, of Abbotsford rd., Roxbury.

Federal agents characterized the place as the most elaborate and well equipped place in the city. A 150-foot bar with three bartenders quantities of beer and ale, bottled and on draught and a [illegible] equipment for mixing whatever drinks might be demanded.

ROXBURY SAFE ROBBERS MAKE SECOND HAUL

Carry Off Strong Box With $600 From Office Next Door to Cafe Theft of Yesterday

For the second successive day thieves too impatient to open their finds on the spot carried away a safe from an establishment in Roxbury, police discovered early today, and the place was next door to yesterday's, on the same thoroughfare.

The safe was taken from the [illegible] office of the [illegible] and has not been found although the car used by the robbers was abandoned and [illegible] by the police.

GOT $50 NEXT DOOR

Yesterday robbers [illegible] of Henry Smith at [illegible] Columbia rd., from which a small safe containing [illegible] to $50 was carried away. The safe, cracked open [illegible] was found in a Dorchester field.

[illegible] both safes [illegible] same means.

SEES 4 MEN IN CAR

A neighbor informed police that he saw a touring car containing four men leave the [illegible] today.

He gave the number to police and the car was found abandoned in [illegible] near Travers st. [illegible] Officers James McCann and Henry [illegible] of the [illegible] station.

In the car were two metal boxes containing stamps, papers and checks, but the safe was gone.

ACCUSED NURSE AWAITS FATE

Behind closed doors trustees of Boston City Hospital met today to decide the fate of a [illegible] nurse under suspicion as a "Raffles."

Stolen property is said to have been found in the girl's room.

Her suspension from duty followed the alleged discovery Wednesday.

The accused girl declined today to make any statement until her case has been passed upon by the trustees. Relatives declared that she is innocent and that a grave mistake had been made.

The suspended girl had been at the hospital two years and [illegible] months and would have completed her course in five months. She [illegible] heartbroken over the affair.

Complaints by nurses and other hospital attaches had become so numerous of late that private detectives, one of them a young woman operative, were assigned to the dormitories. For days suspicion hung over more than 700 nurses and maids. The room of every maid in the institution was [illegible] as suspicion [illegible] turned upon them.

Dougherty Tells Colt That Lola Carewe Is Mixed Up in Jewel Ring

"Isn't she beautiful!" exulted Dougherty. "She looks like a woman who has heard bad news," murmured Colt.

How the Story Started

At 11:30 on New Year's Eve, Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt arrives at the exclusive Mayfair Club in response to a mysterious summons from District Attorney Merle Dougherty. The latter informs Colt he believes he knows the "higher-up" responsible for the numerous jewel robberies perpetrated recently which baffle the police.

Now Read On—

CHAPTER 2

"CAN YOU disclose his name?"

Dougherty [illegible] his voice to a [illegible].

"It's a she!"

"A woman!"

"And what a woman!" hymned the district attorney, his glances rolling eloquently upward toward the glittering chandeliers.

Thatcher Colt's face brightened with a hunter's startled interest. Had Dougherty really turned up something? The district attorney now pointed discreetly with his thumb across the empty dance floor.

"We saw a party of men and women entered in front of the only vacant table visible in that part of the Crystal Room. Barring the newcomers' way stood a waiter, his hands stretched in apology. Through all the talk and laughter one could hear him repeating, 'I am very sorry, senator—this table is positively reserved. You will have to sit farther back!'"

The District Attorney [illegible]

"They'll take a back seat, all right," he predicted. "They'll have to."

Even as he spoke the leader of the party [illegible] and with a rueful smile led his [illegible] to the rear.

"Nobody in New York can have that table tonight, except a very certain lady."

As he leaned toward Thatcher Colt the district attorney added mysteriously:

"That reservation is being held for the woman I'm telling you about. What's more, there are tables for her in half a dozen other night clubs as well. She pays for all those reservations, whether she uses them or not—always sure of a ringside seat, wherever her fancy takes her. Money seems to mean nothing to her. The 'Night Club Lady,' she is called by the Broadway columnists—and sometimes 'The Mystery of Mayfair.'"

Colt's expression remained stolid.

"The 'Night Club Lady'?" he repeated. "Do you mean Lola Carewe?"

"So you know of her, too?"

"Who doesn't, Dougherty? The widow of Gaylord Gifford, the cotton millionaire."

"But nowadays she calls herself again by her maiden name, Lola Carewe. Mystery why she does that too. In fact, my dear Thatcher, she is the most mysterious woman in New York today."

Colt seemed suddenly reminded of [illegible].

"Old Gifford died a year after that sensational marriage, didn't he? And when his will was read, there was hardly enough money left to pay the undertaker. Did you want to talk to me about Lola Carewe?"

[illegible] head on one [illegible] with a [illegible] smile.

"Have you ever seen her?" he countered.

"I think not," replied Colt thoughtfully. "But in a general way I am familiar with her career. She was a cinema performer—was she not?"

"Ten years ago. She first made a hit in a French motion picture about Pampadour—"

"And then went to Hollywood?"

"Where she awa a success. The public idolized her. Along came old Gifford and married her. The story now is that she is thinking of going back into pictures."

[illegible]

"Gifford died a pauper. Yet Lola Carewe continues to live in luxury. The manager told me she will be here any minute now. I just want you to take a good look at her. Then I'll tell you something—"

JUDGES' BILL DEFEATED

The proposal to authorize district court judges to sit in civil cases in the superior court was defeated in the House by a vote of 51 to [illegible].

The bill was [illegible] [illegible] by the committee [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Framingham [illegible] [illegible] as a means of relieving congestion in the civil [illegible].

Representative J[illegible] V. Mahoney of Dorchester handled the adverse report of the judiciary committee. He said that the bill would weaken the district courts and that it would not save the Commonwealth a penny.

He said that the congestion in the Suffolk superior civil court is not due to an insufficient number of judges but [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] should be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

Representative [illegible] gave notice that he will move [illegible] at today's session of the House.

Lawrence Dismisses 9 School Teachers

Lawrence, Feb. 12—Nine unassigned Lawrence school teachers who were doing substitute work in the schools were ordered dropped by the school committee in an all-day session in which recommendations for economy in the school department by Mayor W[illegible] White were considered.

A proposal [illegible] [illegible] educational teacher[illegible] [illegible] other teachers recently engaged was tabled after a lengthy discussion.

Juror's Winnings Go to Welfare Fund

Salem, Feb. 12—A panel in Judge James E. Donnelly's civil session of Superior Court here pooled $1 and each of the jurors conjectured as to the length of time another panel would be out on an auto accident case.

A Lynn juror was the best guesser, and the Welfare Association of Lynn is consequently richer by $4.

Detective Fined for 'Third Degree' Slap

Bridgeport, Ct., Feb. 12—Detective-Sergt. William J. Lynch of Stamford police, charged with using "third degree" methods on a prisoner, pleaded guilty to assault and was fined $100.

Lynch admitted he slapped Joseph Ga[illegible], who was handcuffed after being arrested on a robbery charge.

Colon, Panama, Feb. 12 (INS)—Seventy-five Communists, held for weeks in the San Salvador city jail, were carried on motor trucks driven [illegible] [illegible] interior and executed, it was learned today.

MODEL COACH ELABORATE

Inspired by the beauty of the petite Napoleonic coaches entered in the Fisher Body Guild $700 prize cut-out contest of the Boston Evening American, Frank Laurino, 44, of 152 Dever st., fashioned his idea of one from cigar boxes.

Laurino, a widower and father of five children, is the proprietor of a barber shop. He worked on his model during his spare time, and it took him three months to complete it.

His model has swinging doors with glass windows that can be opened or closed. The interior is upholstered and covered with white satin. Two straps attached to the chassis and frame give the coach the necessary spring.

As a finishing touch Laurino painted his model to look exactly like the paper cut-out.

Prof. Miller Seeks Delegate's Berth

Prof. George S. Miller, assistant to the president of Tufts College, and Eugene A. F. Burnett, of the board of aldermen of Somerville, have announced their candidacies for delegates to the Republican National convention at Chicago from the new Eighth district.

Mrs. Emma Fall Schofield, associate justice of the Malden district court, and Mrs. Lottie W. Buxton, of Everett, club woman, have announced their candidacies as alternates.

Officer Trips, Ends in Undertaking Room

Patrolman James D. MacGinn, of Medford, found himself unexpectedly in an undertaker's parlors while trying doors on his route.

As he reached for the door of an undertaking establishment at 365A Salem st. he slipped and fell through the glass door into the establishment. He escaped with a few minor cuts and helped the proprietor board up the door to prevent anyone else from entering.

SCORE ANOTHER FOR MAILMEN

A man of determination is Olof Orfors when he wants shirts and collars, because Olof is very particular about his shirts and collars.

Olof went back to Sweden from Boston some time ago but forgot to take a sufficient supply of shirts and collars, and when he wanted more shirts and collars of his favorite brand—size 16—he found he didn't know the name of the Boston haberdashery shop which sold them.

But Olof is a man of ideas and he pulled out his trusty typewriter and addressed a letter to Boston from Stockholm, Sweden, as follows:

To the Men's Store,
Where they sell shirts, hats, etc.
The same house as Massachusetts Station.
The store located at Massachusetts ave.
In the corner of Boylston st. and Massachusetts ave., is a Drug Store, and in the next corner of the same building is THE STORE
Massachusetts ave.,
Boston, Mass.,
U. S. A.

The postoffice delivered the letter to E. A. Riley at Riley's Haberdashery, 122 Massachusetts ave., Back Bay, and Olof's order for half a dozen shirts and half a dozen collars is on its way to Sweden today.

Daley Post Veterans to Install Officers

The institution of Eugene Joseph Daley Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, just formed in Newton, will take place in the State Armory, West Newton, Sunday afternoon. The program will include the installation of officers. John J. Keeffe will be inducted as commander.

LONG TERMS FOR GUN TOTERS

The House substituted the bill of Representative William C. Dolan of Boston to revise penalties in the law relating to carrying dangerous weapons.

At present the law provides a penalty of from two and one half to five years for violators. The Dolan bill would keep the present penalty for first offence, but would make second offenders liable to imprisonment for from five to ten years, and third or subsequent convictions would be punishable by 10 to 20 years.

GIRLS SET OUT TO SEE WORLD

Carrying a box containing oranges and cakes, two 13-year-old Milton girls set out to "see the world," according to a note left by one of the pair. Milton police are seeking them.

The girls are Dorothy Navin, 13, of Meagher ave., and Grace Johnson, 13, of Harold st.

The girls set out for school and Mrs. Navin discovered a note in her daughter's room. The note, police say, stated that the girls were sorry to leave their homes, but that they wanted to "see the world and go places."

FLOYD GIBBONS COVERS FOURTH WAR SEEKING THRILLS FOR HEADLINES

FLOYD GIBBONS WAS IN MEXICO DURING THE CARRANZA-VILLA OPERATIONS AND LATER JOINED PERSHING'S PUNITIVE EXPEDITION ACROSS THE BORDER ....

The Mexican campaign was the first war experience of Floyd Gibbons, noted headline hunter now covering the Sino-Japanese conflict for the Boston Evening American. Photo shows Pancho Villa, Mexican bandit chief.

DURING THE GREAT WAR HE WAS ATTACHED TO GENERAL PERSHING'S STAFF. HE COVERED ALL FRONTS — BELGIAN, BRITISH, FRENCH AND AMERICAN — FROM THE NORTH SEA TO SWITZERLAND

The white patch that Floyd wears over his left eye is symbolic of his daring in pursuit of news. A German machine gun bullet robbed the noted correspondent of the eye at Belleau Woods during an advance of the American Army.

HE NEXT WENT TO MOROCCO WHEN THE FRENCH JOINED THE SPANIARDS IN A DETERMINED DRIVE ON THE RIFFS UNDER ABD-EL-KRIM....

The campaign of French and Spanish troops against the Riffs was related in colorful detail for American newspaper readers by Gibbons. A group of Riffs in battle array are shown here.

THE SINO-JAPANESE CLASH IS THE FOURTH GIBBONS HAS COVERED. HIS GRAPHIC DESPATCHES ARE THRILLING MILLIONS OF READERS

In battle-torn Shanghai Floyd Gibbons is on the job again, shooting back the colorful and latest stories of the action to the readers of the Boston Evening American through Universal and International Newsreel Services. Photo shows Chinese machine gunners at work.

2-GUN BAKER GRIPPE VICTIM

Patrolman James H. (Two-Gun) Baker is a contender for the title of the "unluckiest guy in the world."

Five of Baker's six children are ill at his home on Sachem st., Wollaston, with scarlet fever. Yesterday Baker himself was stricken with intestinal grippe and is being held under observation for possible development of scarlet fever.

Baker has had so much sickness in his family during the last year that, last night, he said it would have been easier for him to open a private hospital at his home to handle sick members of his family.

The five children now sick are James, Jr., 12; Louis, 7; Walter, 5; George, 3, and David, 18 months. Andrew, 10, is the only one that hasn't contracted the disease. Last July, five of the six children had the measles and, in September, the entire six had the mumps. Earlier in the year Mrs. Baker was in Quincy City Hospital for five months recovering from a major operation. Since he has been on the police force, Baker has been injured in 17 accidents.

MAYORALTY NOT FOR GALLAGHER

Acting Mayor Edward M. Gallagher blocked a move by the Brighton Women's Club to support him as a candidate for mayor in the next city election.

More than 50 members of the club called yesterday at City Hall to pay their respects to the acting mayor. They volunteered to organize a drive to support him in the mayoralty campaign.

"I am not a candidate for mayor. So let us forget about that," the acting mayor said.

To each of the women he presented a book relating the history of Boston's tercentenary celebration. Heading the group were Mrs. Joseph Shea, president; Mrs. Edward M. Gallagher, vice president; Mrs. George Farrell, secretary; Mrs. Francis H. Benson, treasurer, and Mrs. J. H. Muldoon, Mrs. Frederick Robinson and Mrs. Thomas McMahon, past presidents.

Mrs. Anthony Ill; Case Is Postponed

Owing to the illness of Mrs. Ruth M. Anthony, of 208 Fuller st., Brookline, wealthy widow, in the separate proceedings brought by Mrs. Louise P. Jacques, of Brookline, against her husband, Henry F. Jacques, wealthy real estate operator, the hearing has been postponed until Tuesday, March 1.

GIBBONS' LIFE OF THRILLS HUNTING HEADLINES

(Editor's note — Following is the second of a series of six stories giving the "high lights" of the colorful and interesting career of Floyd Gibbons, now "covering" the Sino-Japanese situation at Shanghai for clients of International News Service. The stories are written by Henry Wales, himself a famous war correspondent and a "buddy" of Gibbons for a great many years.

In the first article, Mr. Wales told of Gibbons' reporting in Mexico with Pershing, in the World War where the headline hunter's left eye was shot out and he was thrice wounded, in the Riff war, of his three trips around the world, his work in the Russian revolts, his dispatches on the starving of thousands in Russia when he got food from America for the refugees, of his work in Ireland and in "covering" the elevation of Pope Pius. Now go on with the story.)

By HENRY WALES

CHAPTER II

Floyd Gibbons wrote two books, "The Red Knight of Germany" and "The Red Napoleon." Previously, when he was recuperating from the loss of his eye, he wrote "They Said We Wouldn't Fight."

He has done several scenarios. He made lecture tours. He appeared in vaudeville, and he prepared and directed a series of motion pictures in which he appeared with such notables as General Pershing, Newton D. Baker and General Harbord.

The end of September last, the first danger spark of trouble in the Far East flashed across the international sky. Japanese troops seized Mukden, took possession of the arsenal there, one of three in all China, and the largest and best equipped.

DASH TO JAPAN

The International News Service obtained Floyd Gibbons' services. They put him under contract to go to the Orient and report the situation. They grabbed this veteran of three wars and a score of foreign revolutions, whose descriptive writings and utterances had enthralled the American public for a score of years.

Gibbons dashed across the Pacific in the same steamship with Will Rogers, off on a jaunt round the world. The International News Service completed arrangements by wireless for Gibbons to be received as soon as he could motor to Tokio from Yokohama, by the Japanese Premier and the Japanese Minister of War.

A couple of hours after he had touched Japanese soil Gibbons was flying over it, westward toward Manchuria. His plane refuelled at Shimonoseki, traversed the Straits of Korea to Fusan, refuelled again and sped northwest over the ancient "Hermit Kingdom" and on to Mukden.

GIVEN RIGHT-OF-WAY

The veteran war correspondent literally cleaned up in the Manchurian phase of the Japanese operations. His experience and ability won him the respect of Gen. Honjo and his staff.

Pony sleds, riding horses, automobiles, trains and airplanes were put at his disposal. He was given all facilities to visit every theater of action.

He visited the various Chinese organizations, Gen. Mah's army and the irregular formations, some practically bandit forces, harrying the invading troops.

Scenting the coming shift in operations, he flew down the Liao Tung peninsula past Dairen, the one-time Russian port, to Port Arthur, constructed by the Tzar prior to 1905 as a Pacific naval base and Eastern terminus of the trans-Siberian railway. He started for Shanghai.

ALMOST BEAT THE FLEET

Japanese naval forces, steaming under forced draught on their secret mission to Shanghai, arrived at the Whangpoo only a couple of hours before Floyd Gibbons.

Covering the Shanghai operations Gibbons has "mopped up" in impressive style. His eye-witness stories of the menace to the International Settlement, of the seething panic in the Chinese quarter, of the dreadful carnage from shells and bombs in the flimsy-built suburbs of Chapei, and finally of the assaults on the Woosung forts, are classic examples of the art of journalism, the nice dovetailing of complete accurate news with graphic descriptive and keen human interest.

No other newspaper correspondent's despatches have approached those of Gibbons in clarity, in vivid color, in wealth of detail.

And his messages on the general situation, his analysis of the strategy employed, and the tactics used, his forecast of future phases of the operations, have been unequalled.

Tomorrow the Boston Evening American will publish the third installment of Floyd Gibbons' life and activities.

Children Get Estate

The will of Patrick McNamara, late of Brookline, allowed in the Norfolk County Probate Court at Dedham, assigns his entire estate comprising $22,500 to his three children.

POLICE BEATEN IN AUTO HUNT

Not satisfied with ordinary police methods in recovering stolen automobiles, John B. Kempkee of Essex st., Lynn, took matters into his own hands, used his own methods and then triumphantly called the police and told them that he had been successful in getting back his own car which he had reported stolen a few hours before.

He first called Lynn police headquarters at 3 p. m. and informed them of the theft of his car. An hour or two later he called to inquire if it had been recovered and when he learned it had not he then started on his own scheme.

Kempkee hired a taxicab and ordered the driver to cruise around the streets of Lynn. After a few minutes' riding he wer rewarded with the sight of his own car left abandoned on Rogers ave. He then called the police and crowed about it, explaining that he knew there was only a small quantity of gasoline in the tank and he figured that the thieves couldn't get very far with the car.

Displaymen to Hear Ernest Hoftyzer

Ernest Hoftyzer, assistant publisher and advertising director of the Boston Daily Record, is to be guest of honor and principal speaker at the monthly dinner and meeting of the Boston Displaymen's Club in the City Club next Monday evening.

His subject will be "The New Competition." Frank J. McCann, of the Sears Roebuck Co., president of the club, will be toastmaster, and another speaker will be John C. Nicodemus, advertising manager of the Continental Stores.

STOCK TRIAL TO JURY TODAY

Arguments will be made today at the trial of Stephen J. Richards of Fair Oak Park, Needham, and Charles W. Seager of [illegible] st., Brookline, who have been on trial nine days before Judge James A. Lowell and a jury in Federal Court on an indictment returned by the grand jury charging them with using the mails to defraud in a $1,400,000 stock transaction.

The case is expected to be given to the jury late this afternoon.

Asst. U. S. Atty. Hazen Parker concluded the government's case when he cross-examined Margaret L. Powers, secretary-treasurer of the Founders Security Trust and United Investment Assurance Trust, of which Richards and Seager were trustees and managers, and brought out that the defendants were on the payroll of the Founders Security Trust, each at a salary of $[illegible] a week.

Miss Powers testified as a defense witness that a lawyer was consulted when the trusts were organized. She said neither Richards nor Seager were on the payroll of the United Investment Assurance Trust.

COURT DENIES WIFE'S PLEA

Dinerman, now of Mattapan, is not justifiably living apart from her husband, [illegible] Dinerman, credit clothier of Beverly and Salem and a former high commissioned officer of the Russian army, Judge Harry R. Dow has ruled in denying her petition for separate support.

Judge Dow found, however, that as the children have been living with the mother, Dinerman must pay for their support while they remain with her until further order of the court. The sum of $[illegible] a week was specified.

The game of poker was described to the court last week as having been one of the chief troubles of the family, Dinerman admitting in court that he had frequently played for 25 and 50 cent stakes, but objecting under some circumstances to his wife playing for money.

Lowest Bidder for Brockton Building

H. H. Sewel & Co. of Framingham was lowest bidder for the construction of the new State agricultural and industrial building on the Brockton Fair grounds.

The architects' plans call for a building 108 by 7[illegible] feet and the design will be after that of the Old State House.

Burglars Cart Off Safe Holding $600

Burglars smashed into the branch of the Edison Co. at 560 Columbia rd., Dorchester, and stole a safe weighing 250 pounds, and containing $600, last night. The previous night they stole a similar safe at a lunchroom at 5[illegible]8 Columbia rd.

Girl About Town

—By ALYCE SIEMENS—

The President is ageing visibly.
  His job is the most thankless in the land
What anguish to be President, and be Adversely criticized on every hand

Heav'n help the man who steers the Ship of State!
  For him let sobs ring out, let tear drops gush!
But when it comes the time to nominate,
  Let's hope no statesman's trampled in the rush!

Nick Lutze—Gee! he's a beautiful looking chap! . . . Jack Shannon—There's a comical fella for you . . . Jack Sharkey—Did you know he walked right into a welfare fund bureau the other day and handed out 100 bucks in cash? He's always doing nice things for people that you never hear about . . . Earl Nelson—You should see his beautiful apartment. In pretty good taste, too! . . . Billy Payne—Swell Irish songs that bird delivers . . . Leo M. Birmingham—He's my ideal of a swell guy and even though he's an undertaker now, I think he'll be our next police commissioner . . . Mayor Curley—A great favorite of mine. Can that man talk? He's sure a nifty orator . . . Babe Ruth—Gosh! There's a honey for you. You ought to see the bunch of baseballs he's autographed for me. Would you like to have one? . . . But one guy that gives me a pain is Rudy Vallee . . . Much too gushy and I always turn off the radio when he's on the air." And that, Bostonians, is one of our coming young citizens speaking to you.

From Our Memo Pad

With the Cairo [illegible] open [illegible] we've been listening, and now we're telling on them . . . [illegible] show girl never fails to take her [illegible] and the Collette [illegible] along [illegible] when [illegible] So young men of [illegible] pocket [illegible] before [illegible] date after [illegible] that the reason? . . . Chaz Chase make funnier faces off [illegible] than he does on and [illegible] cigar butt [illegible] in front of him . . . [illegible] other night at the Grove he was seen playing around with the [illegible] with the boss there exclaiming "Great Heavens, don't let that Chase guy eat my spot" . . . Dolores Orlando is the loveliest blonde show person in town now. She makes all her own clothes and was truly a charming picture at the Mayfair Wednesday in a peach panne velvet Empire gown of her own needling.

Lookin' Thru the Mail

To Cherry: [illegible] the mail department. The good looking [illegible] box player [illegible] with the [illegible] orchestra is a [illegible] named Bernie Larsen. He sits next to his brother. Cherry can he help it if he appeals?

To Teddy Bear: Thanks for poems. Keep on trying. Cannot use [illegible] with [illegible] names mentioned.

To Marge: We can easily see why you read the "Mel's lost and found dept." if a pretty green hankie was found after a week and a half. Your poem tribute to the passing on of the popular young lady was lovely, but could hardly be used here.

To Bud Payne: So one of Boston's ultra-society girls has four autographed photos of Mickey Alpert framed and hanging on the walls of her Commonwealth ave. boudoir, eh? Mickey'll love that! . . . Invitation [illegible].

To W. Burke: No denying you're ambitious. Here 'tis:

Sophisticate

Toss your pretty auburn hair,
Close your eyes of mystic blue,
Tilt your chin as if you do not care
And let me get a sock at you.

'BORIS GODUNOFF' IS WELL PRESENTED

Ensembles Feature of Opera

By MOSES SMITH

The Chicago Opera Company gave an excellent performance of "Boris Godunoff" last night before a large and [illegible] responsive audience. This beautiful collection of folk scenes, for it is not really an opera in the conventional sense, is a spectacle for the eye as well as music for the ear, and this is emphasized, fortunately, in the Chicagoan production.

* * *

The ensembles which constitute most of the [illegible] and [illegible]. The [illegible] not only [illegible] well [illegible] peasant [illegible] or [illegible]. Boris [illegible] were cut down [illegible] more in keeping with scene and action [illegible]. The [illegible] were impressive and [illegible] under the [illegible] great share of the [illegible] to the stage director Dr. Otto Erhardt.

The drama in the work for which Moussorgsky has written such spontaneous and racy music [illegible] a comparatively small part of the whole, but it is exceedingly tense while it lasts and [illegible] centered in one [illegible] role which was [illegible] Chaliapin's tour de force. Vanni Marcoux played [illegible] last night, and we repeat what we have said on a previous occasion, that he makes up for [illegible] the [illegible] Chaliapin and [illegible] the finest praise we can think of. Indeed Vanni Marcoux does not attempt to imitate but presents his own splendid characterization, so moving and eloquent that [illegible] on the spectator backstage [illegible] we can [illegible] in watching him [illegible] in the second act, which [illegible] the audience in front [illegible] scene [illegible] understandable [illegible].

The remainder of the cast, too long to be listed, contributed to the [illegible] and power of the performance. Emil Cooper conducted with fine appreciation of the beauties of the score, keeping good balance between orchestra and singers.

Marion Davies is adept as a trapeze artist in "Polly of the Circus," on local screens soon.

MARION AS AERIAL STAR—SUPERB IN MOTHER ROLE

Louise Carter and Nancy Carroll have splendid roles in "The Man I Killed," which has been held over for a second week at the Olympia and the Uptown. Louise has the mother role.

Daphne Pollard Here Saturday

At the RKO Keith-Boston theater tomorrow the famous screen comedienne Daphne Pollard, whom movie fans will recall in a hundred film classics of comedy, begins a special engagement, her first stage appearance in four years. Miss Pollard is being seen in a new vaudeville vehicle designed to display her talents, including song numbers, eccentric dance specialties and travesty.

Billy Payne

Bob Hope, "the enemy of depression and the hope of a nation," is also on a bill which includes Billy Payne, Boston tenor.

Publix Plans for Opening

Arthur L. Mayer, advertising director of the entire Paramount Publix organization, arrives in Boston Monday for the last minute [illegible] with General Manager Ralph Branton, Division Manager Edward Cuddy and District Manager Edward Zorn on matters relative to the opening of the new Paramount theater.

Mr. Mayer comes to assist in the work that has been started by the [illegible] advertising staff under the direction of Harry Browning, division director of advertising, and Harry Rosen [illegible] attending manager.

Opera Tonight

Mozart's "Die Zauberflote" (The Magic Flute), with Mmes. Frida Leider, Helena Mara, Maria Rajdl, Thelma Votipka, Sonia Sharnova, Helen Freund, Messrs. Alexander Kipnis, Paolo Marion, [illegible], Edward Habich. Conductor, Egon Pollak.

Bickford Born in Cambridge

Charles Bickford, who has the role of a "wildcat" oil operator in "Panama Flo," Helen Twelvetrees' latest starring production, now at RKO Keith's, was born in Cambridge. He received his early education there and in Boston and attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with an engineering career in mind. He left college abruptly to join the United States Navy. After what he calls "quite a hitch" in the service he found himself ashore in San Francisco and out of a job. At the suggestion of a friend he embarked on an acting career.

Trizie Friganza Due at Scollay

How old is Trixie? That depends entirely upon what constitutes age. Trixie Friganza has been a stage favorite for 40 years. In that period she has reached the heights in vaudeville and musical comedy here and abroad and as according to the exuberant lady she did not begin computing should you be curious about Miss Friganza's age.

Miss Friganza will be at the Scollay Square Theater for a week, commencing Monday, in a new comedy morsel called "A Trip to Hollywood."

Ina Claire Star of Film at the State Today

Beginning today Loew's State will show "The Greeks Had a Word for Them" with Ina Claire, Joan Blondell and Madge Evans in the chief featured roles. Lowell Sherman directed the picture as well as acted in it. David Manners, Philips Smalley and Sidney Bracey also appear. Included among the other features is the latest Zasu Pitts-Thelma Todd two-reel comedy, "On the Loose," a Fitzpatrick Traveltalk, "Ireland," and Hearst Metrotone News.

"Lovers Courageous" at Orpheum Today

Robert Montgomery's "Lovers Courageous" is the screen attraction opening today at Loew's Orpheum.

The singing comedienne Miss Patricola will headline the new vaudeville bill in songs. Another headline attraction will be Nelson B. Clifford and Marie Marion in "Dumber Than Ever." Sylvia and Clemence and Andrini Brothers in "Tunes and Steps" will appear. Among others billed are Nowatt and Hardy, "Something Different."

M-G-M Plans to Feature Nils Asther in Many Leading Man Roles

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service, Inc.

Copyright, 1932, by Universal Service, Inc.

Louella O. Parsons

Los Angeles, Feb. 12—You may expect to see Asther an important Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer leading man ere the year passes. What plans are now being hatched for him? One of his first roles will be as Joan Crawford's leading man in "Letty Lynton" and he draws Clarence Brown as director. He is now playing an important role in Robert Montgomery's picture, "The Truth Game."

Mr. Asther, for a time, was handicapped with his accent. He has now subdued that considerably and, since good looking young leading men who can act are scarce, Nils' opportunity, it seems, has arrived.

The fans, I might add, have never ceased to urge that he come back. Mrs. Asther (Vivian Duncan to her public) will make some personal appearances while her husband is busy at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Miss Asther, thank you, is doing nicely.

Stars on Sick List

Mrs. Lionel Barrymore has been [illegible] sick with influenza the past few days. A trained nurse is in attendance and it is doubtful now if she will be well enough to go east this next week. [illegible] is another who is on the sick list. A bad cold and sore throat is keeping her in bed. Harry Brandt is in Seattle telling the natives about "Arrowsmith." The newspaper boys and girls like Harry so well they are always glad to spell any of his boss's names right. The John Barrymore baby is due in June.

Chance for New Star

Cornered Irving Thalberg in his office and told him if he didn't soon get the lead of "The Red Headed Woman" he could count on me to leave town suddenly. For no good reason hundreds of red heads are sending pictures and writing letters applying for the job. When they hear this there will be more letters than ever. Irving has definitely decided that neither Joan Crawford nor Clara Bow will play the part. Instead of putting a well known star in Katherine Brush's much discussed book, Mr. Thalberg has made up his mind to find an unknown girl.

Tidbits of Interest

The horned toad race that was staged yesterday in Palm Springs. All the film stars had entries. Mrs. Darryl Zanuck called hers Polo, Charles Farrell named his Seventh Heaven while Mervyn Le Roy came back with Little Caesar. Mrs. Zanuck tells me that Darrilyn was very much hurt at me because I didn't include her name among the younger set in Hollywood. Let me remedy that now and say if Darrilyn continues the way she looks now she will be a belle.

We are always glad to hear that the pioneers are still picture-making. C. C. Burr has been producing pictures almost as long as I have been writing a column and that is so long I won't even tell my best friends how many years I have been on the job. Mr. Burr is about to produce "The Midnight Patrol" by George Jeske. Another old-timer, Christy Cabanne will direct. The only thing about the picture that is not pioneer is the cast. Ginger Rogers and Regis Toomey put their names on the dotted line.

Snapshots of Hollywood

FLORENCE RICE, one of the prettiest girls who has come to Hollywood in a long time, lunching with PHILLIPS HOLMES. Local gossips say PHIL is much interested in GRANTLAND RICE'S daughter. ANITA STEWART who now sings on the radio once a week, lunching also at the Brown Derby. Her escort was friend husband GEORGE CONVERSE. DORIS KENYON has invited a few friends to a buffet bridge honoring RICHARD ROWLAND. JEANETTE MACDONALD is entertaining Saturday night with a large dinner party in her home in Beverly Hills. MARY PICKFORD is giving DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS a farewell party the same night. The wedding date of DOROTHY MANNERS and WALTER RAMSEY has been definitely set for March 8. MRS. WILLIAM K. HOWARD, DOROTHY'S matron of honor, is giving a linen shower next Wednesday for the bride-to-be. BEULAH LIVINGSTONE writes to say that she visited MADAME OLGA PETROVA at Cap Ferrat. She reports the incomparable PETROVA looks younger than ever. Also that DAGMAR GODOWSKY is much in evidence. That's all today.

Letters Praise Studio Folk Highly

By N. F. T.

Listeners certainly seem to like that "Good Samaritan of the Air" idea launched here on Wednesday.

Letters were plentiful and continue coming across the [illegible] desk this morning nominating radio folk for special mention in appreciation of kindly acts and human qualities reflected while broadcasting. Tony Wons is cited today.

Send in the name of the artist you believe should be admitted to this Boston American Radio Hall of Fame. Those striving to render more than cold commercial service should be duly regarded in some out of the ordinary manner.

Boston University and Dartmouth men hold their 60-minute debate today, the discussion coming through WNAC between 4 and 5 p. m. They take up the question of whether or not America should have government control of radio broadcasting as now maintained in Great Britain.

Speaking from the same room where Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, President Hoover addresses the annual Lincoln Day dinner gathering by radio tonight and his voice will be heard here at 10 30 through Station WEEI.

Tony Wons Named as Radio 'Good Samaritan'

Announcer for Morton Downey and Jacques Renard heard nightly (WNAC) at 7:45 is nominated by Mrs. Robert Dorey, 224 Warren st., Allston. Mrs. Dorey says:

"His kindly tone and natural delivery, as well as the beautiful poetic verse he selects, brings comfort and cheer to those who like to relax while listening."

Tony Wons

Send in the name of your candidate and state reasons why the man or woman you name should be made a member of "The Good Samaritan Club of the Air."

An exceptionally colorful Lincoln Memorial affords another full hour presented by Yankee Network studios heard on WAAB from 9 to 10 tonight. Hon. Chas. P. Sisson, Asst. U. S. Attorney-General, will visualize in words "How Lincoln Might View Problems of Today." Maud McGarry Tibbets delivers the immortal "Gettysburg Address" on this program. Vocal selections by the Knickerbocker Quartet furnish an unusual background of song.

LOCAL LATHER

Fred Hoey puts his tonsils in training soon. Larynx need um' het-ing up for baseball games even as arms and legs. Please everybody, be warned against engaging Lee (WBZ) McCollum at billiards unless the stakes are no more than cigars . . . Bob (Old Man Sunshine) Pierce bright morning star heard on WNAC these days, hasn't worked so hard and liked it, since he was headlining at WLW, Cincinnati, just about one year ago this time . . . Check, double check. Okay and other expressions of assent for the suggestion from a loyal Local Latherite who thinks "I'll be glad when you're Dead You Rascal" is sillier and more meaningless than "No bananas" . . . Aidan (WBZ) Redmond has the biggest voice for his size of any melody man on the waves hereabouts . . . It's a baritone basso, one of the best . . . What Hub air organist is working on a stunt to interview his big console, as more or less modest proof he can make it talk? . . . This scoop comes right from a certain big Wurlitzer itself, which distinctly said "Arthur Martel" plain as could be . . . Right now it's just final that Joe Solomon's Orchestra will play the Lucky Hour from Boston before March 1st . . . Adrian Obrien is back again to sing for New England instead of New York . . . PERSONALITIES ON THE AIR

An opening prayer for an'ncers. It looks like the beginning of the end for them. NBC just ruled "Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience" and all other howdedo phrases are taboo.

"Unnecessary verbiage," says NBC. Righto. Since the an'ncer's personality chatter as much as possible and leave more room for advertising blurb.

GERMANY'S Chancellor Bruening is NBCed from Berlin Sun when he discusses disarmament. Col. Lindbergh's wife talks about China on both networks February 21 . . . Ann Pennington and Frances Williams, B'dway stage names of the first rank, do a turn on the Grove p'gram, WNAC Mon. Peggy Hopkins Joyce discusses Leap Yr. Etiquette for Ladies o'er WNAC the 14th . . . WEEI will undergo voluminous day time changes next wk. Market Reports, Daily Tattler and Reading Circle will shift spots.

Another NBC an'ncerial law that goes into immediate effect is a ban on giving the boys' names on the air except on ultra-ultra p'grams.

A smart move. Now you won't know who to blame, hate and swear at.

Slowly by little the an'ncer is becoming just a memory.

AMOS 'N' ANDY will cease broadcasting in a few months, is the newest rumor. Probably bunk . . . Margaret (Bath Club) Santry gets $1000 a wk. for interviewing . . . Folks are complaining about those one minute WAAB commercial talks between p'grams . . . Leon Belasco's real tag is Leonid Semanovich Berladsky . . . CBS's pronouncer Ed Cullen got his start with WEEI . . . Lee A bee of WNAC [illegible] When Jack [illegible] goes to the Keith-Boston Mar. 19, Irene Hanify and Mary Rumrill will merge with him for trio effect as well as piano and him . . . Joe Solomon's orch. will do a Lucky Strike turn within a few wks.

Whoops—it's here. NBC will offer a p'gram Feb. 27 in which no an'ncer will be heard.

Hence, if the an'ncer slaughter continues there'll be no one to give the commercial blurb.

That is, unless they get crooners to sing about the product. At least that would be different, though worse.

WHY WOMAN SHOOTS MAN—ALWAYS HER NERVES

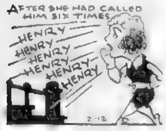
By HELEN ROWLAND

IF THERE is one thing that makes a normal woman wish that murder were not against the law, it is a man's casual suggestion that she [illegible] control her nerves!

• • •

Woman's "nerves" have been man's favorite alibi, ever since Eve lost here voice trying to get Adam up in time for breakfast. There is nothing else in the world with which a man is so tenderly sympathetic

• • •



[illegible] Little Woman [illegible] waited and waited for [illegible] beauty sleep [illegible] a fit of hysteria.

• • •

Nerves! Huh! (Mocking laughter.)

• • •

[illegible] that makes her [illegible] the perspective [illegible].

• • •

It's her "nerves" that make her glare at her husband, when he brings home that unexpected guest for dinner on Thursday, when the cook is off and there's nothing to eat but left-over beef-stew and canned peas.

• • •

It's nothing [illegible] cholia or drive her [illegible] when she has been waiting two years for a man to ask her to marry him, and he suddenly begins rushing her [illegible] cousin.

• • •

It's her "nerves" that make her [illegible] eyes at a red [illegible].

SHE HAS HAD TO FIND YOUR HAT

• • •

It's ALWAYS her nerves! A woman never has any moods, opinions, reasons, feelings—she is never disappointed or angry or weary or blue or discouraged or indignant. She is never anything except "nervous"!

• • •

And a man [illegible].

Eyelid Tumor Differs From Common Sty

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

CHALAZION is a swelling of the eyelid frequently confused with a sty. It is caused by an obstruction to the opening of the passage way from one of the glands in the eyelid. This results in a swelling of the lid at that point. This little tumor is likely to become infected, then we are likely to have a chronic inflammation.

Dr. Copeland

The condition differs from a sty. It lacks the [illegible] sign of inflammation. There is no redness and no pain. No pus formation is visible. Because of this the condition is often overlooked for a considerable time. It is only realized when it grows in size.

The tumor [illegible] enlarge. After a period of months it may reach the size of a pea or be even larger. It [illegible] disfigurement of the lid.

Chalazion may be caused by rubbing the eyes, exposure to wind and dust and lack of [illegible] of the eye. [illegible] in their effort to find [illegible] ment.

The only cure for the condition is a simple operation. There is no medicine or treatment that will cause the swelling to disappear. As the tumor grows it definitely interferes in the movements of the lid. If neglected it may break down, become infected and is then more serious.

"Do you mean to say," demanded Colt in a low tone "that you have a real reason to believe the widow of Gaylord Gifford is mixed up in a jewel ring?"

"I do!" avouched Dougherty with a positive shake of his head.

Madly in Love, Girl Says

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

I am madly in love with a man who lives in another city. He visited me over the holidays and discussed love and marriage but said he couldn't marry me until he got enough money. Since he returned to his [illegible] I have found out from his workmates that he has been keeping steady company with a girl in that city. Do you think he was serious when he [illegible]? He hasn't written to me since he left.

MARGIE

Dear Margie: As the young man [illegible] since he went away after the holidays, it would seem he wasn't very serious in his lovemaking, don't you think? He probably has been busy explaining to the other girl that he wasn't in earnest, during the Christmas holidays, if the friend who told you about "the other girl," told her about you.

He's Not Engaged

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

My girl friend is having a birthday in a few weeks' time. Would it be all right for me to give her a piece of jewelry when we are not engaged, or do you think flowers and a book would be in better taste?

E. J.

Dear E. J. As long as you are not engaged to the young lady, I think that flowers or a book, a couple of books, even, would be better for a birthday remembrance than jewelry.

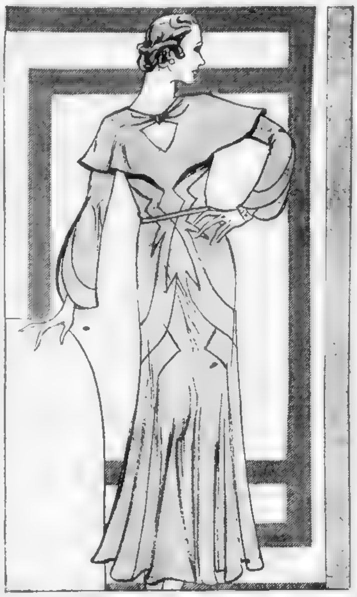
Lelong Uses Dark Green Crepe-Birman

SKETCHED IN PARIS



Lelong uses dark green crepe-birman for this afternoon dress. The clever cutting and seaming in this model are features of the entire new collection chez Lelong. Another detail favored by this house is the seven-eighths length sleeve. In this particular case it flares and is slashed in a curving line up to the elbow. The deep bertha is used only in front, for it curves around over each arm and finishes at the back of the sleeve in the role of capelet.

Lucy May Loves to Visit Her Grandma's Humble Home

By WINIFRED BLACK

LUCY MAY has gone to visit her grandmother. And Lucy May is very happy.

She loves to visit her grandmother, and her mother and her aunts can't imagine why.

Grandma lives in a queer little house in a queer little street, in a queer little old-fashioned village that has been left over [illegible] in the midst of all the frills and feathers of modern life.

Grandma has a front porch and a front garden and a fence and a gate made of pickets painted as white as snow.

She has a back yard, too, and in the summer there is a syringa and a honeysuckle and, dear me, how sweet they make the air.

Grandma's house is small—there's just a bedroom and a kitchen and a little dining room and a lean-to shed and a wood shed and a summer kitchen and a sitting room.

Not a living room, mind you. And not even a parlor. Just a plain old-fashioned sitting room with some old-fashioned pictures on the wall and an old-fashioned table in the middle of the room, and an old-fashioned motto that says "Home Sweet Home," over the top of the door.

Grandma's mother worked the words in scarlet worsted on silver cardboard when she was a little girl and she gave it to her mother for Christmas. And grandma wouldn't trade it for the finest picture out of the Louvre in Paris.

Grandma has old-fashioned ways as well as an old-fashioned house.

She makes homemade bread, believe it or not, and it is pleasant to walk into her kitchen and smell the brown loaves just coming out of the oven.

She makes pickles, too, and chow chow and a certain kind of "relish" that would make a chip of wood taste good.

Grandma has a cookie jar. It's always full of cookies and she never seems to have heard that cookies are fatal to the health and happiness of a little girl.

Why she even has a big old [illegible] bowl where you can always find a homemade doughnut or so. I told you Grandma was old-fashioned.

And Lucy May just loves it at grandma's.

She never has to stay alone in the nursery as she does at home. She just trots around at grandma's heels and sometimes grandma lets her roll out the dough for half a dozen cookies and cut them out with the top of an old baking powder can, and Lucy certainly loves to do that.

Grandma has a little broom for Lucy May and she lets her sweep the porch with it, and she has Lucy May help her about everything and Lucy May doesn't feel [illegible] and no account and nothing and nobody at grandma's.

She feels important, and busy, and she doesn't miss her governess or her nurse, or her whole family of dressed-up dolls at all.

Lucy May's mother is a good deal worried about Lucy May. She says she is a good child and nice looking, but dear me, she has the queerest ideas.

You really can't blame Lucy May's mother very much, can you?

And yet somehow—I think Lucy May's father would like to leave his big empty house and go down to the queer little village where he was born and live in the little old-fashioned house with grandma and Lucy May.

I wonder why?

New Aid for Low Cost Cooking

By MARTHA LEE

From Martha Lee's Friday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

THIS IS a red letter day in the Martha Lee Cooking School! A new piece of equipment has arrived and we are all agog to see it to work.

It's a good old-fashioned cast iron skillet brought up to date with a coating of shining green enamel and self basting cover. It has just endless uses, from fried chicken with gravy to swiss steak, stew, goulashes, chop suey, spaghetti sauces and braised chops.

A good workman deserves good tools and this one will give efficient service for many years to come.

It will be a big help in preparing low cost dishes from some of the cheaper cuts. Here are two, for example:

SWISS STEAK

2 lbs. round steak, cut 1½ inch thick
½ cup flour
Salt and pepper
3 tbsps. fat
A clove of garlic
1 onion, sliced

Put steak on board; pound the flour, with the edge of a heavy earthen saucer or meat tenderer, gradually into the steak, first on one side and then on the other. Season with salt and pepper. Cut garlic in half and rub over the meat. Melt fat in frying pan, add onion, let brown slightly, set to one side put in meat, let brown on both sides. Add boiling water to cover, cover closely and let simmer 2 or 3 hours, or until tender. Serves 8 people.

RIBS OF BEEF (Spanish)

Take short ribs of beef, season with salt and pepper, rub over with a tiny clove of garlic. Put in heavy pan. Cover with boiling water, add ad onion, sliced. Cover tight. Let cook slowly about 2 hours. Add 2 cups tomatoes, add 1 tsp. paprika and cook gently one hour.

Bridge Prize Etiquette

By MRS. BEECKMAN.

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN

At our last meeting, a guest, who was kind enough to fill in for an absent member, had the highest score, which entitled her to first prize. "A" contends she should not have accepted the prize, but I think she was right in taking that which she won. Is it not passe for guests to refuse prizes?

L. B.

"A" is distinctly not right in her point of view about this. Of course the guest, especially under these circumstances when she was doing a favor, should keep the prize that she won.

Good looks aren't always luck

Sparkling eyes and a smooth complexion depend on good health.

The beautiful woman guards against constipation. She knows this condition can cause headaches, sallow skin, dull eyes, pimples, premature aging.

Protect yourself from constipation by eating a delicious cereal. Tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" to exercise the intestines, and Vitamin B to tone the intestinal tract. In addition, ALL-BRAN furnishes blood-building iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is similar to that of lettuce. Within the body, it forms a soft mass, which gently clears the intestines of wastes. How much safer than pills and drugs—so often habit-forming.

Two tablespoonfuls daily—in serious cases, with every meal—will correct most types of constipation. If your trouble is not relieved in this way, see your doctor.

Serve as a cereal, with milk or cream, or use in cooking. At all grocers. In the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Daily True Story

That Higher Justice

"COWS ON an aviation field! Who ever heard of such a thing?" The question merged into a snort as Red Kirkwood drew a battered cigarette from a dog-eared pack in his shirt pocket. "Why folks'll think we're runnin' a dairy instead of an airport."

Red pointed the unlighted cigarette at his partner. "And it's all the doings of that dirty skunk, J. Hamilton Girard—gimme' a match, Doc—. Look at that fence. It's a good fence, but the cows get into our lot even though we wired the gate shut. Why?" Red glared through a haze of smoke. "Because J. Hamilton's old man owns the cows and that field next to ours."

"And what do we do about it?" Red continued, "Nothing, except herd cows. And I don't like the looks of that young bull. That baby is getting color conscious."

Doc Weller polished his horn rimmed spectacles. "There's a higher justice," he said mildly.

GOING TO THE BAT

"Nuts!" exploded Red, cigarette smoke coming out of his nostrils like the explosion of a miniature bomb. "And while we're waiting for higher justice to turn a flip-flop we're taking it on the chin plenty. I say take it to a court of law."

Doc shook his head. "With J. Hamilton being on the calling list of half the politicians and judges in town? No, we'll have to bank on higher justice. We'll get our inning."

"Not if we don't go to bat," declared Red.

"We'll go to bat," said Doc, significantly, "when the time comes. Meanwhile, quiet down. Here comes that insurance fellow with the fire insurance policy on the hangar. We can't go unprotected. J. Hamilton might go so far as to commit arson on the place."

The insurance agent disposed of Doc Weller said tucking the policy in his coat pocket.

"Well, that just about cleans up the roll, Red, but if we can get that contract with the radio company we're all set. They're giving us a trial tomorrow; J. Hamilton will get his trial the day after."

"Speakin' of the devil," ejaculated Red, "here comes the gentleman farmer and stick-pusher after his cows."

The rival airman appeared dressed in a frayed rustycolored jacket and khaki trousers. His face was thin, his eyes shifty. "Sorry if these cows bothered you," he mumbled, "I don't know how they get through the fence. Must know the combination on the gate."

Neither Red nor Doc spoke. As he drove the cows through the gate, Red said:

"Did you get that red tie he's wearing. He sure does go in for fancy colors—got his crate painted with red and yellow stripes."

"Yes," said Doc, "I've been noticing."

TRIAL SHIPMENT

Aviation offered to J. Hamilton Girard an excuse from irksome farm duties that had bothered him for years. His father was a wealthy but industrious farmer and J. Hamilton had grasped opportunities—had put in his flying hours at the Weller and Kirkwood airport, and had then promptly established a rival field on the Girard farm, not many yards away. It was, to quote Red Kirkwood, "a rotten trick," for there wasn't enough sky business in Elkridge to support two airports.

The flight of the Weller and Kirkwood cabin monoplane to the city of Preston the next day began under an overcast sky.

"If them cows get on the field today," said Red, "it's going to make it tough landing. Maybe I ought to stay at the hangar and keep the field clear."

Doc, who was at the controls, shook his head. "Now, if we get that contract, you might as well go the [illegible] of the land right off. J. Hamilton [illegible] keep the cows off the field and these radios we've got is just a trial shipment. The load of radio tubes we haul back with us is most important."

On the return trip to Elkridge it began to rain and the plane had to fight a strong head-wind. Thunder roared in the east, lightning flared sullenly, and the two were much relieved when the dark green of their small landing field lay beneath them. Doc brought the plane lower in a diving left bank and was about to complete a landing when Red stopped him with an exclamation. "Hold everything, Doc, there's the dairy."

His sharp eyes had caught sight of dark moving blotches which indicated grazing cattle. "That dirty dog, Girard!" muttered Red.

"Doc's trigger brain came into action. "We'll bring her down on that vacant lot back of my house and phone the radio company to send their truck after this stuff. We can cover the ship and leave her on the lot all night."

HANGAR IS BURNED

The next day Doc and Red filed into Lawyer Berger's office. "Hello, boys," he greeted, "I hope that hangar of yours was covered by insurance."

Both men stared at him. Doc was the first to speak. "Yes, we had the hangar insured, but what about it?"

The lawyer looked surprised. "I thought you heard about the lightning striking the hangar early this morning and burning it to the ground. I happened to be at the fire and I remember now that someone said you were in Preston. You were lucky that you didn't lose your plane."

The aviators could only nod.

"But young Girard wasn't so lucky, was he?"

"What about Girard?" Red managed to ask.

"He's in the hospital, will be there for sometime I hear. It seems that at milking time he was heading his father's cows off your field and that young bull of theirs got to him. I guess it was because of that new red jacket he was wearing. It was given to him by some unknown admirer. I guess you fellows will have the flying business to yourself for some time to come. Was there anything you wanted to see me about?"

Red was speechless but Doc blinked and said, "No I guess not, Mr. Berger."

Outside of the lawyer's office they snapped out of their trance. "Say," ejected Red, "I'm beginning to believe that thing about higher justice! We ought to send J. Hamilton a bouquet seein' as how that insurance fellow wouldn't give us any insurance on our old crate. We——" he paused, "But say Doc you look kinda' sad."

"You know," mumbled Doc, "I'm kind of sorry I sent that young jackass that red leather jacket!"

FANNING

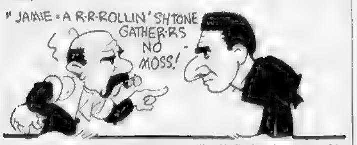
Nurses Are Giggling. Corbett in Hospital. Father Always Right. ↕ Story of Roving Bee. Jim's Fine Bank Job. Noted Sparring Mate.

Tale of a Guy Who Makes World Better

We'll wager that the nurses and internes in Presbyterian Hospital, New York, are getting many a good laugh these days. Chuckles cluster about Jim Corbett like flies around a sugar barrel. At 68, and sick or well, Jim Corbett bubbles just as joyous, boyish, infectious good humor as he did when he was a mere stripling and dethroned the greatest fighter in the world, John L. Sullivan. Only the shadow of Death could bring gloom into the same room with Jim Corbett. While Jim is ailing the doctors say his illness is not serious and he soon will be out and about. God be praised for that. The world is better for the Jim Corbetts The laugh-makers chase the doctors and undertakers away. With his ever-present grin and booming laugh, Jim Corbett always is knocking Kid Gloom for a goal.

The last time we met Jim Corbett was in a railroad station A natural place, for Jim hops about the map like a flea. He came up behind us, put both hands over our eyes and bet us a buck we couldn't guess who it was. We got the buck. The purring bass chuckle gave Jim away. Jim started in to berate us by saying we had caused him more family wars than anyone else. "I think you're rotten," grinned Jim, "But Mrs. Corbett makes you her sports bible. I can't say a thing without the missus telling me George Underwood says different. The other morning I forgot to duck and the coffee cup almost destroyed my manly beauty."



"JAMIE = A R-R-ROLLIN' SHTONE GATHER-RS NO MOSS!"

Stories of his old Irish father roll off Corbett's tongue like apples out of a barrel. "My Dad always was right," chuckles Jim. "The first time I left home the Old Man warned me I was making a mistake. " 'James, my lad,' he declared, 'the r-r-rolling stone gather-r-rs no moss!' But when I returned with what was a big bankroll in those days, father declared, 'Didn't I tell you, Jamie, it's the roving bee that gathers the honey!' "

"Father was dead set against my taking up boxing," says Gentleman Jim. "I was working as a bank cashier in San Francisco and the Old Man was mighty proud of it. He continually was warning me about losing my job in the bank. After I got pretty good with the gloves the crowd at the Olympic Club wanted me to box a fellow by the name of Billy Sullivan. I agreed. But father heard of it and made me promise to call it off, fearing for my 'job in the bank.' I went down to Sullivan's house to tell Billy Dad wouldn't let me box. Billy called me yellow. So I gave Billy a licking. Then his big brother pitched on me and I had to lick him, too. During the two fights I was considerably mussed up. Dad ran a livery stable. I sneaked back home and into the barn to wash up before Mother or Dad could see me. But as I was bent over the basin the Old Man came in and caught me.

" 'Huh!' he snorted, 'So you've been fightin' ag'in? Ochone! Ochone! And you with the fine job in the bank!'

For five minutes father lectured me, bemoaning my jeopardizing my 'fine job in the bank.' But little by little the Irish was getting the best of him and he was drawing me out for facts about the fight. I told him truthfully how I had followed his instructions and had attempted to call off the fight. And how after I had licked Billy Sullivan his big brother had pitched in to me and I had to lick him, too .

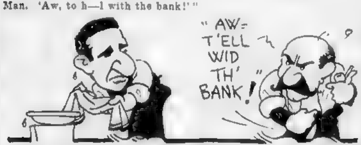
" 'So ye licked Billy Sullivan?' exclaimed the Old Man.

" 'Yes, father,' I replied.

" 'And ye licked Billy Sullivan's big brother?'

" 'Yes, father,' I answered.

" 'Bedad, and ye licked the two of 'em?' exclaimed the Old Man. 'Aw, to h—l with the bank!' "



"AW-T'ELL WID TH' BANK!"

Jim Corbett loves kids. He hasn't any of his own. But we don't know how many summer evenings we have driven past Jim Corbett's home on Long Island and watched him romping with the neighbor's children. Jim is full of stories on kids. He tells of two newsboys in a Cleveland hotel. It was just after the Sullivan fight when Corbett was on a theatrical tour. President William McKinley happened to be in the same hotel, and Mark Hanna, the political boss, had brought the President to Corbett's room for a little chat and relaxation. It came time for Jim to leave for the theater and President McKinley to keep a speaking engagement McKinley took Corbett's arm and the champion and the President of the United States came down the hotel stairs together, arm in arm.

"A crowd had gathered," says Corbett. "Everyone wanted to look at President McKinley. But down at the foot of the stairs I overheard two newsboys.

" 'Who're the two guys in the tall lids?" inquired one newsie.

" 'Yuh boob!' snorted the other. 'Can't yuh see it's Jim Corbett and his sparring partner!' "

Heuser and Dempsey Win at Cleveland

Cleveland, Feb. 13—Adolf Heuser, German light heavyweight champion, who does his fighting under the banner of Johnny Buckley of Boston, scored his fourth consecutive [illegible] in five American bouts, when he kayoed George Manley in the fourth round of their scheduled 10-round bout here.

The Heuser-Manley match was the featured bout of a show headed by the so-called exhibition involving Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight champion, and K. O. Christner, the Akron veteran.

The Dempsey-Christner affair turned into a real battle midway of the first round and Dempsey finally stowed the rugged Christner away for keeps in the third, after having him on the floor four times.

Dempsey Shows Old Time Wallop

Once in the first round and three times in the third, Dempsey impressed the crowd of 9714 which paid $27,972 to see him strut with his punching and sent Christner from the ring a sorry sight, the Akronite spouting blood from his nose and mouth and from a cut under his right eye.

Heuser, who made his American debut here in December by losing to Patsy Perroni, young Cleveland heavyweight, in one of the most sensational bouts seen here between big fellows in years, never gave Manley a chance last night.

Heuser leaped out of his corner at the first bell and rocked Manley, who formerly lived in Denver but now resides in Akron, from stem to stern in the first round, after which it was only a question of how much punishment Manley could stand.

Body Attack of Heuser Punishes Manley

Heuser had Manley's body a crimson color before the first round was over as a result of a vicious two-handed body attack. A right to the chin staggered Manley in the second, then another body attack left him hanging on the ropes and [illegible] out on his feet as the round ended.

Heuser kept walking in, punching with both hands, again in the third and Manley by this time was spending all his time trying to catch the German's punches. He made a dismal failure of this job, and again went to his corner on wobbly legs.

Heuser ended it in the fourth when he staggered Manley with a beautiful right cross to the chin. Another right dropped Manley in his own corner, and although he regained his feet at the count of nine, he was in a helpless condition and his seconds tossed in the towel.

CRIMSON FIVE TAKES ON B. U.

Boston University's veteran basketball team goes to Cambridge tomorrow night to stage its annual court battle with Harvard at the new indoor athletic building.

The Terriers have not defeated Harvard in basketball since 1926 but they feel confident that they will be able to tomorrow. The Crimson quintet has not been having a very successful season and the Terriers hope to take the measure of Ed Wachter's pupils.

Boston University has been strengthened by the return of Santo Marino. Santo was a three-letter man for two years but he dropped out of school this fall. He returned for the second term, however, and is now eligible for the five. He played a few minutes against Providence and will be ready to start against Harvard.

Frank Spain Off Green Hockey Team

Hanover, N. H., Feb. 12—Frank Spain, a star of the Green hockey squad, is ineligible. Bob Bennett, defense man, also is on the shelf.

Passing the Puck

By BILL GRIMES

Thirteen Montreal Maroons left Boston on track 13 to play 13 more games of the N. H. L. schedule.

Since the Maroons' first appearance here they have improved so much that they do not look like the same team that was beaten 7 to 3 by the Bruins Dec. 1.

Manager Sprague Cleghorn has worked hard to get the Maroons into a winning stride and, judging from the 7-to-4 win over the Bruins, has finally developed a winning combination.

In the past there was considerable talk that everything was not harmonious in the ranks of the Maroons. It is a different story this year, for every player is giving his best at all times to produce victories.

George Owen pulled off the hat trick. He put the Bruins out in front in the first period, scored from a faceoff in the second and just before the final bell beat Flat Walsh for his third goal.

The first period was easily the best played at the Garden in a Bruins game this season. The Maroons were short handed for about half the period but the Bruins were only able to score once.

The Maroons call Nels Stewart the Big Act. Nels is hustling for Manager Cleghorn and so is every other player on the squad. "Peg" keeps the Maroons in good humor with his comedy, but he is all business during a game.

Eddie Shore and Nels Stewart had a verbal jam in the opening period, each resenting the way the other acted in a scrimmage on the boards.

Due to the misleading rule in the program many fans do not understand the anti-defense rule. Because a team has more than two players in the defending zone, it is not necessarily breaking this rule. If a puck is shot into the attacking zone every member of the defending team can be in there without breaking the rule.

Also they can all be in, without a penalty, when the puck is carried in, providing three of them are attempting to come out at the time the puck carrier enters. If they [illegible] trying to get out it [illegible] for a penalty.

On the first Maroon attack Lionel Hitchman stopped Jimmie Ward with a solid body check. On the next play Eddie Shore shook Hooley Smith's teeth with a terrific check. Then the battle started.

Hooley Smith took his spite out on Marty Barry, giving the popular Bruins winger a check which looped him into the air and he turned a complete somersault. Hooley tried to duplicate this check later on but Marty grabbed him by the hand and saved himself from another nasty fall.

The Bruins went back to their four and five man attacks last night and poor Tiny Thompson was left out on a limb many, many, times. They ain't doin' right by our Tiny.

GEORGE BATTERS COUNT AT ARENA

ED KAYOS FOE WITH BUTT IN MAT GO

By JACK CONWAY

They must be feeling this fellow Ed Don George raw meat budging by the way he knocked off Count Zarynoff in their bout at a Paul Bowser show at the Arena.

The Count [illegible] the first fall in 20m. 21s. with a flying body [illegible] but he paid for it before the match came to an end. Ed won the second fall [illegible] with an inside crotch [illegible] and slam. George used all of his power when he dropped the Count to the canvas to drive him back home clear through the ring.

When hostilities were resumed George forgot all about the niceties of polite wrestling and went at his opponent much like a wolf pounces at a crippled animal. He butted and tackled Zarynoff all over the ring. He then knocked the Count cold with a flying butt under the heart. Zarynoff landed on his back.

Referee Charles Donnelly tried to give the Count a break by holding George back. He got [illegible] for the Count to get up but the latter was completely out. It was necessary for the referee to declare George the winner.

Roughness of George Displeases Mat Fans

The crowd booted George. They felt he had been too rough.

I drifted into George's dressing room after the bout.

"What's the matter with the fans?" he demanded. "Wrestling is a rough game, and merely because I happened to knock the Count out there is a squawk. I suppose the same fellows would have cheered if Zarynoff had crippled me."

I remarked to George that he appeared to be in fine physical condition.

"I weight 215 pounds, all hard flesh and bone," he said. "When I showed in Boston early in the season, I was quite fat. I had taken things easy during the summer, and put on extra weight.

"I am wrestling faster than ever. I feel stronger. If condition and aggressiveness mean anything, I'll win back my lost title."

Bibber McCoy, who was originally billed to meet George, was obliged to withdraw from the match at the last minute on account of eye trouble. Paul Bowser was fortunate in being able to secure Zarynoff as a substitute. The Count is rated as a much better wrestler than McCoy.

Few Ask for Refund on Switch of Foes

After some of the preliminaries had been run off the fans were told that Zarynoff would replace McCoy. The fans were informed that any of them who wished could get their money back at the box office. Bowser stated it was only necessary to refund $[illegible].

The Count gave George plenty of opposition early in the bout, then tired. Ed packed too much dynamite in his 215 pounds of fighting bone and flesh.

Pat McKay, one of the toughest young men keeping the wolf off his front lawn, in case he happens to have a front lawn, by following the wrestling game. He called upon all of his fiery tactics in his bout with Farmer George McLeod but they didn't get him to first base.

It appears that McLeod is not only tough but also quite a wrestler. The Farmer's famous flying head scissors finally won him the verdict in 21m. 1s.

Matmen Use Conway for Landing Cushion

Charley Strack of Oklahoma and Lee Wykoff of the University of St. Louis produced a bundle of wild thrills during their 30-minute bout. They came flying through the ropes half a dozen times. I'm prepared to offer an affidavit to the effect there is plenty of power in Strack's beef as they crashed into my right wrist during one of these gay trips into the press row.

During the evening a dozen wrestlers came shooting at me. Guess they must have thought I was pinch hitting for Bibber McCoy.

Fats Carmichael and A. Dinkham went 10m. to a draw.

Ed Elzea won from Lloyd Stuart in 8m. 7s. with a body lift and slam.

At Morelli furnished one of the high spots of the show when he knocked off Tommy Texis in 3m. 32s. with a flying tackle. The former Boston College hero is coming to the front at a terrific clip. Keep your eyes on this boy.

John Grandovitch won from Nick Elick in 3m. 12s. with an inside crotch hold, body lift and slam.

It was 50-50 with Jake Patterson and Buck Weaver after 10m. of wrestling.

Al Beveridge, who once used to play baseball in Dorchester, was beaten by Charles Hanson in 7m. with a body scissors and wrist lock.

Rudy Laditze, who used about everything but a club, disposed of George LaSan in 8m. 47s. The boys spent so much time batting around in my lap I don't know how Laditze ever found time to apply the winning hold.

DEGLANE IS PUT ON SPOT

Henri DeGlane, world's heavyweight wrestling champion, has been put on the spot in a $100,000 civil suit for damages filed by Jim Browning.

DeGlane was served with legal papers returnable in Suffolk Superior Court the first Monday of March. Browning's move came as a complete surprise to the champion who is carded to meet Lee Wykoff in a bout at Salem tonight.

Browning alleges breach of contract on the part of DeGlane. He charges that the champion has refused to go through with a contract to meet him in a title contest, and that as a result of the Frenchman's actions he has suffered damages to the extent of $100,000.

"I feel I would have won the title from DeGlane," said Browning. "I believe $100,000 is really small damages to ask. As champion, I would have made much more money than this."

Browning is represented by Attys. John J. Walsh and Logan McLean.

Time Limit Not Up, Says Deglane Counsel

DeGlane has engaged as counsel former Lieut. Gov. Edward Barry and Harold Sullivan.

In a statement issued today Barry admits DeGlane signed a contract to meet Browning, but he adds that the time in which the match must take place has not yet expired.

Paul Bowser, under whose direction Browning and DeGlane agreed to wrestle, refused to make any statement.

"Let Browning and DeGlane fight it out in court," was his only comment.

Bowser Riled at Champ's Refusal to Meet Jim

It isn't any secret that Bowser is riled at DeGlane's refusal to go through with the Browning bout. Last December the Frenchman returned home rather than tackle Browning.

Bowser has tired of the foreign champion and would like to see him licked by Browning or some other American wrestler.

It was hinted today that DeGlane has his trunks packed and that he will try to slip aboard a ship for France if he can avoid being served with a court order keeping him in this country. Browning's counsel are expected to take action to keep DeGlane in this country. If necessary, they will appeal to the immigration authorities at Washington.

Six Colleges Used Art Under Four Names

This is the sixth of a series of highlights in the career of Arthur the Great Shires, colorful new first baseman of the Braves, written by Joe Cashman, baseball expert of the Boston Evening American. Other installments will follow daily. Watch for them!

Art Shires' college career wasn't the cause of the Carnegie Foundation's probe of intercollegiate athletics. But it could have been.

Like the coy young miss who was often a bridesmaid but never a bride, Whataman attended at least six colleges, yet was graduated from none.

It wasn't that he lacked the brains or other qualifications necessary to earn a degree, as is proven by the fact that he was less than 17 years old when he finished high school.

His extraordinary athletic ability was responsible for his record-breaking collegiate hop-scotching. He just couldn't escape receiving and accepting flattering offers to change Alma Maters every so often.

Rival Coaches Wanted Art for Alma Mater

Every rival coach who saw the handsome husky Texan perform on the baseball diamond, gridiron or basketball court wanted him. And several succeeded in getting him.

Of course he wasn't listed in the catalog as Charles Arthur Shires. It frequently happened that he had to manipulate his name a bit to get in [illegible] sheepskin, you know.

He was officially no less than four other persons between the time he left home to embark on his college career and his major league debut.

Which gave him an opportunity to prove that the Immortal Bard of Avon knew his stuff when he wrote that which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Shires Started Career as Pitcher

Like scores of other star infielders and outfielders past and present, Shires began his baseball career as a pitcher.

Usually the crack youthful performer who is placed on the mound is being badly miscast, which accounts for the large number of hurlers who later drift to other spots, but this wasn't true in Shires's case.

He was good enough to be the mound ace at every college he attended. In fact, he was so good that he is credited with having won 68 games in three seasons and if he lost even one decision it is not recorded.

And it was as a pitcher that he first attracted the attention of big league scouts and was signed by the Washington Senators in 1925.

But here we are getting away from Art's college career and we're perilously close to the bottom of the page.

So further comment on his campus perambulations must wait until tomorrow.

Bass Elected Captain of Terrier Nine

The Boston University baseball team this season will be captained by Alden C. Bass of Chicago.

A brilliant career on the gridiron for Bass was cut short in his freshman year by a severe leg injury and he was forced to confine his athletic activities to the diamond.

SKI AWARDS BEWILDER CROWD

Lake Placid, N. Y., Feb. 12 (INS).—[illegible]

[illegible]

Norwegian Skier Jumps 204 Feet

[illegible] leaped 69 meters in a graceful parabola to register the third best jump.

The crowd left the slush of the ski jump thinking that the men had finished in that order but the judges went into a huddle to emerge several hours later with different ideas.

It seems that form counts more than [illegible] and by using some complicated system of mathematics the judges decided that Johann Grottumsbraaten of Norway had won the combined event.

Crowd Bewildered by Decision of Judges

He finished sixth in the ski race yesterday but first among those who were competing in the combined event. His greatest jump yesterday was 163 feet, but although that didn't come near to the distance made by Vinjarengen who was leaping like a startled fawn, his form was perfect and that meant something with the judges.

JUST FOLLOW THESE RULES

1. Each day for 36 consecutive days (except Sundays) the Boston American will print a Washington Patriotic Prize Puzzle. In each puzzle an historic event in Washington's life will be named. You are invited to solve the puzzle and name the event. The puzzles will be printed in 6 weekly series, each series complete, and each series having its own prize awards.

2. The Boston American will give each week valuable awards to the persons who send in the nearest correctly solved puzzles in accordance with these rules. Winning a prize one week does not prevent competition in following weeks.

3. This offer is open to everyone—men, women, boys and girls—except employees of the Hearst newspapers in Boston and members of their families. There is nothing to pay—merely a test of your skill and knowledge.

4. Puzzles must be submitted each week, each series of six in a complete set for that week. Do NOT send in each puzzle separately.

5. Each set of six puzzles must be in the mail no later than midnight on Tuesday following publication of the last puzzle in each series. Address "WASHINGTON PATRIOTIC PUZZLE EDITOR," Boston American, P. O. Box 185, Boston, Mass.

6. Each entry must be sent by First Class Mail, postage prepaid. Entries with insufficient postage will be returned by the Post Office. Be careful to have your name and address on each puzzle. Make your entry simple and neat. Neatness will count.

7. You need not buy the Boston American in order to compete. You may copy or trace the puzzles and send them in. The Boston American may be examined at 5 Winthrop Square or at Public Libraries free of charge.

8. No entries will be returned.

9. The judges will be appointed by the Boston American. Their decisions will be final. In case of ties a duplicate award will be given to each tying contestant. Your entry in the competition denotes acceptance of all existing rules or any that may be made during the time of contest.

10. The Boston American reserves the right to alter or amend these rules at any time.

Second Week's Prizes

FOR SERIES B PUZZLES

1st Prize. A round trip to Havana on a palatial United Fruit Co. liner.

MAROONS HEADED FOR N. H. L. PLAYOFF BERTH

CLUB TRIMS BRUINS AT GARDEN

By BILL GRIMES

After floundering around at the bottom of the Canadian division for more than two months, the Montreal Maroons served notice that they are going places between now and the close of the N. H. L. season by trimming the Bruins, 7-4, at the Garden.

Until recently, the Maroons were severely handicapped by a weak defense and they were the victims of many tough breaks.

Since the Maroons' first appearance at the Garden, they have improved in every department. In their initial game here, they were one of the weakest teams that has played at the Garden, and the Bruins cantered to a 7 to 3 win.

Two weeks ago, the Maroons returned and although they played better hockey than earlier in the season, they were still far below standard, yet, by a sensational first period offense, they sewed up the game and finally took the Bruins, 4 to 3.

Manager Sprague Cleghorn has labored long and strenuously to whip his Maroons into a winning stride. He has met with many reverses during the closing minutes of games which were apparently all sewed up. The Montreal fans were at a loss to understand why their battling Maroons were not more consistent winners and rumors were current that Cleghorn was to be relieved.

"Peg" Cleghorn

Apparently Manager Cleghorn knew the Maroons better than anyone for he never lost faith in them, and has predicted many times that they would reach the playoffs. The Maroons are one of the greatest offensive clubs in the N. H. L., having scored 107 goals, but the records show that they are, or rather were, the weakest defensive outfit, with 109 goals scored against them.

The Maroons staged one of the wildest offensives of the season at the start of the second period against the Bruins, beating Tiny Thompson six times in 9 minutes and 16 seconds. They were unstopable from the face-off but they had a two-man advantage when they tallied their first and second goals, for Eddie Shore was serving a major penalty, and Perk Galbraith was in for two minutes.

Owen Is Standout With Three Goals

Jimmie Ward and Nels Stewart were the Maroons' high scorers, with two goals, but their feats were eclipsed by that of George Owen who produced three of the four Bruins' markers. Archie Wilcox, Jimmie Brydson and Baldy Northcott accounted for the other Maroons' goals, while Frank Jerwa nicked the odd Bruins' tally.

During the first period, the play was fast. Art Chapman was split under the eye and on the side of his nose when he was tripped by Lionel Conacher as he attempted to dash in on the Maroon net, while Jimmie Ward was cut for five stitches on the top of his head.

For the first 20 minutes, the game was an old time Bruins-Maroons Donnybrook Fair. There were all kinds of heavy body checking and high sticking. Seven penalties were dealt out. Before the end of the period, Babe Siebert, Eddie Shore, Perk Galbraith and George Owen were in the box at the same time.

The Maroons showed the best brand of hockey they have ever played here. They were shorthanded for about 10 minutes of the first period but once they were at top strength they let fly with everything.

Maroons Headed for Playoff Berth

Now that the Maroons are tied with the Americans for third place in the Canadian division they will be a tough outfit to keep out of the playoffs. Perfect harmony exists among the Maroons and they are all in there battling to redeem themselves for their poor showing during the early part of the season.

They have now won three straight games, taking the measures of Americans, Les Canadiens and Bruins. They are confident that they will stop Toronto tomorrow night, for Lorne Chabot drew a match penalty for slugging a goal judge in Detroit and Benny Grant, formerly of the Cubs, will be in the nets for the Leafs.

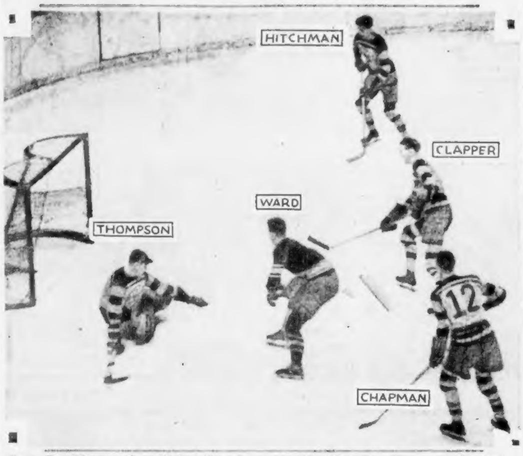
WARD FOOLS TINY AT GARDEN



Ward, fleet Maroon wing, flashed through the Bruins to tally one of his team's seven goals. He faked, drew Tiny out, and scored. The Bruins lost, 7 to 4.

MAY HAVE TO RAISE ROOF

It looks as if they would have to raise the roof at the Boston Arena tomorrow night. Such a covey of cloud soaring pole vaulters will strive for the laurels in the 43d annual meet of the Boston A. A. that it is hard to tell at what height the bar will be lifted.

Fred Sturdy

Topping the list are two great vaulters from California, Fred Sturdy, the Yalensian, and his Los Angeles A. C. clubmate, Verne McDermott. Sturdy is the present indoor national champion. He has vaulted 13 feet 11 inches. McDermott has cleared the bar at 13 feet 10½ inches. What is half an inch between two such great vaulters? Either can win, and both are in danger of being topped by Keith Brown, the sensational Yale freshman, and Oscar Sutermeister of Harvard.

George Spitz, the world's greatest high jumper, will be seen in the high jump, and the giant Herman Brix, world's greatest shot putter, in the weight event. Leo Lermond starts in the Hunter Mile and Joe McCluskey and Gus Moore, who brought down the house last year, will hook up again in the 5000 meter special.

Hank Bruder, George Simpson and Ira Singer will measure strides in the sprints. George Bullwinkle and Russ Chapman will have it out at 1000 yards. Monty Wells will top the fences against Bob Maxwell, Dick Pomeroy and a great field of timber toppers in the hurdles.

Otis Miller Signs With Boston Hose

The latest addition to the Sox fold is Otis Miller. The signed contract of the veteran utility infielder was received at Fenway Park today, Secretary Hy Mason announced.

Hockey Giggles

By BILL GRIMES

During his short stay with the old Arena H. C., an amateur furnished considerable comedy.

When he came here, he saw a shower bath for the first time and he was so flabbergasted by the contraption that after Frank Synnott had carefully explained how to operate it, our hero walked into the needle spray with his towel in his hand.

On a trip to Pittsburgh, the Arena H. C. stopped over in New York and while he was in the Big Town, the boy blew himself to his first pair of American shoes.

He was as proud as a peacock with his new footwear. In fact, he spent so much time admiring his shoes that he was nearly run over a dozen times.

As soon as he boarded the train for the Smoky City he strolled into the smoking compartment, where four or five traveling men were reading. He stood in the middle of the floor gazing at his new shoes. Finally he was so overcome that he blurted out to the strangers, "What do ya think of my boots"?

MR. BOSTON

By JACK CONWAY

WARREN BROWN, sports editor of the Chicago Herald-Examiner, tips the world that the highly advertised "battle" between Jack Dempsey and King Levinsky is only going to be one of those four-round no-decision exhibition affairs in which the rival warriors will have their dukes covered wth large gloves. Suppose the old Tiger has got to get a little easy money somehow.

FRANKIE DERICE, Portland boxing and wrestling promoter, is planning to hop a train for Florida. While DeRice is away, Chick Hayes will run the shows at Portland. Remember when Chick battled Bobby Josephs, Al Shubert and other featherweight stars? Hayes was a capable bird with his fists. He is also one of the few boxers I know who knew enough to remain retired once he hung up the padded mittens. Hayes and Harry Kelley, incidentally, operate one of the few paying gyms in New England.

Mr. Boston

WHAT'S THAT? Old Fireman Jim Flynn wants to toss punches at Jack Dempsey again! The Fireman is burnt up because Dempsey has intimated that he went in the tank for that one-round knockout Flynn holds over him. Flynn says he may be slightly blind, but that he is still good enough to lick the former champion all over again.

SAM LANGFORD always will like Flynn. The Fireman and Sam once went 10 rounds on pretty even terms. The men were rematched. Sam's train was leaving early that evening, and so he paraded from his corner in the opening round, pasted Flynn on the chin with his mighty right duke and went on his way merrily.

Speaking of Liquor, Politics and the Boxing Game

CHARLEY MEALEY popped into the office talking fight. He has taken over the management of "Sparky" Larkin, former Andover amateur. Larkin recently engaged in a stirring tussle with Matty Borgia of Bristol, R. I., at New Bedford. During his career, Mealey has been active in the liquor business (of course before prohibition), politics and the boxing game. He says politics and the boxng game are runnng a close race for conniving honors.

IF YOU WILL promise not to tell anybody, I'll let you know that Miss Dorothy Clayton, that Park Avenue society doll, slipped into Lou Stillman's gym one afternoon to see Ernie Schaaf in training. I hear Ernie says it with 21 American beauty roses when he goes calling on his lady fair.

DON'T LET ANYBODY kid you that Schaaf has gone Tunney. As this is a family newspaper, we have never been able to quote Ernie correctly on what he has said about some of his future opponents.

Gene Tunney

YET I UNDERSTAND that Charles Francis Coe, the author, arranged for Tunney to give Schaaf a two hours talk on the fine points of boxing before Ernie's second winning scrap with Tommy Loughran in Philadelphia. I recently talked with Schaaf about this incident and he told me my information was correct.

"I like Tunney," said Schaaf. "I found him to be a fine fellow. I think he is much misunderstood."

Father Bill Cuddy Still Amateur Boxing King

DESPITE THE EFFORTS of many other promoters, Father Bill Cuddy is still the king of amateur boxing. His St. Joe shows are the best offered in New England. I don't even make an exception for some of the so-called championship tourneys. You'll be glad to hear that Cuddy will be back on the job at Mechanics Building a week from tomorrow night.

Jack Sharkey will leave tomorrow for Florida on a two weeks vacation. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Sharkey and Mr. and Mrs. William Kennedy of Newton. Mr. Kennedy is president of Kennedy's clothing stores.

While in Florida Sharkey plans to play golf with "Bill" Kennedy. The latter is one of New England's best left-handed golfers, and will give the American heavyweight champion some real competition.

JIM CORBETT PINS K. O. ON SICKNESS

New York, Feb. 12—James J. Corbett, 65-year-old former world's heavyweight champion of fisticuffs, propped himself up on his hospital bed, rolled up the sleeves of his fancy lavender pajamas and said with great gusto:

"I feel so much better already I'm thinking seriously of challenging the winner of the Sharkey-Schmeling fight. That is, at least a game of ping-pong or something equally becoming to my age.

"Gentleman Jim," who won the world's championship by knocking out John L. Sullivan after a fierce 21-round battle to the finish at New Orleans in 1892, has been in the Presbyterian Hospital here for what he describes as "a little tuning up."

"I'm really not sick at all," said the veteran fighter, who became a familiar figure on the screen and stage after his retirement from the ring 28 years ago.

"I just had a little cold and some trouble with my digestion. The Doc thought I ought to have a little rest and a lot of pills and—so here I am."

A nurse brought in two telegrams. One was from Jack Dempsey and it read:

Wire From Dempsey Dims Corbett's Eyes

"Dear Pal Jim: The usual Corbett courage assures me you will score a knockout over old man illness. Good luck. JACK."

Even the large shell-rim glasses that "Gentleman Jim" wears now didn't conceal the film of mist that came into his eyes as he read the telegrams.

But just then the telephone rang. Corbett swung the still powerful fist that doomed John L. Sullivan over to a little table alongside his bed and picked up the receiver.

"How are you, dear?" a feminine voice said at the other end of the wire.

"I'm feeling just like a 2-year-old, sweetheart," Corbett replied, wrinkling his face into a broad grin as he added:

"You better hurry up here, though. You know those new fancy lavender pajamas you bought me? Well, the nurses think I look like Rudy Valentino in them. You better hurry up."

Corbett Has Great Faith in His Wife

"That was my wife," he chuckled, after he had hung up. "She's wonderful. We've been married for 35 years and she's been buying my shirts and ties and pajamas and socks for so long I've even forgotten what sizes I wear."

"Gentleman Jim," for all his 65 years, still bears the vestiges of that powerful frame with which he retained the world's title for five years before relinquishing it to Bob Fitzsimmons in 1897. Tall and straight, he has only a few wisps of gray hair in his sleek black hair.

Ski Title Meet at Greenfield

Greenfield, Feb. 12—The U. S. Eastern ski championship, Sunday, should be the greatest ski competition conducted in this country, second only to the Olympics.

Fifteen Olympic contestants have already entered the event, representing United States, Poland and Sweden. An effort is being made by Greenfield to obtain the Norwegian team. These performers will come fresh from the Olympic games at Lake Placid tomorrow evening in a special Pullman chartered by the Greenfield Outing Club.

"Pop" at Stanford for Five More Years

Palo Alto, Cal., Feb. 12—Pop Warner, Stanford grid coach, has O. K.'d a five-year renewal of his berth here.

When John L. Sullivan Knocked Out Ryan

THE REAL JOHN L. SULLIVAN

This is one of a series of "Finishes of Old-Time Fights" that is a feature of the Sports Section of the Boston Evening American.

This story is about the fight between John L. Sullivan and Paddy Ryan, fought Feb. 7, 1882. It was a battle between two game men and the gamer won. The men fought for $2500 a side and each wagered $1000 on the result.

By W. S. FARNSWORTH

According to the accounts of the scribes who covered this event, there never has been a prize fight in the United States that created such widespread interest as the match between Paddy Ryan, of Troy, N. Y., and John L. Sullivan, of Boston, for the heavyweight championship of the world, fought at Mississippi City, Miss., a half-century ago. Sullivan weighed 193 pounds and Ryan 195.

Sullivan Wins in the Ninth

The finish came in the ninth round. When the boxers met in the center of the ring they had little remaining strength and both missed leads. They clinched, coming to grips in their desire to do each other harm, but, Sullivan being the stronger, delivered several telling righthanders to Ryan's jaw and temple. These blows drove Ryan back without giving him a chance to counter, and finally sent him down in a heap. It was so evident that he could not arise in time that his seconds tossed in the sponge in token of defeat.

It was one of the fiercest and most determined battles of modern times. The time of the final round was 11 minutes. Throughout Ryan made a gallant fight and bore his punishment manfully. He was terribly punished, his face and body showing the marks of Sullivan's battering attack.

McNamara-Horan Lead 6-Day Riders

Chicago, Feb. 12 (AP)—Reggie McNamara and Horan, crack Newark, N. J., pair, and another American combination, Jimmy Walthour and Charley Ritter, were still tied for the lead in Chicago's 27th international six-day bicycle race after the 9 o'clock sprints tonight.

Each team had covered 1757 miles, nine laps, with McNamara and Horan holding the edge in points, 192 to 129. Jules Audy and Torchy Peden; Willie Grimm and Bobby Walthour, and Alfred Letourner and Marcel Guimbretiere were tied for second position, one lap back of the leaders.

Charlestown Boys Face M. I. T. Frosh

The basketball team of the Charlestown district of the Boys' Clubs of Boston will have a tough assignment in the freshman quintet of Massachusetts Institute of Technology tomorrow at the Eben D. Jordan Memorial gymnasium.

The starting lineup for the Boston team will consist of Captain John Crowley center, Fred Daly and John Sweeney forwards, Al Baker and Joe Dooley guards, with John Connolly, Harry Madary, Ben Portnoy, Jim Crowley and Dick Sullivan as reserves.

Bridgton Trails

Lewiston, Me., Feb. 12—Bridgton Academy lost to Bates freshman six, 6 to 2. Yeaton starred for Bates.

AMATEURS IN BATTLES AT GARDEN

Whoever wrote that line to the effect that hope springs eternal in the human breast apparently had the carefree amateur boxers in mind. Some 40 of them will let the old leather fly in the University Club's show at the Boston Garden tonight.

If it were not for the simon pures, there wouldn't be any boxing at the Garden. The pro game has been as dead as last June's roses at the North Station sport palace.

It will not be necessary to turn away any cash customers at the Garden show tonight, but those who do attend the show will probably be served with plenty of unadulterated action. The simon pures do not know all the fancy tricks connected with the gentle art of boxing. Which probably explains why the spectators get so much action.

Jim McCarron

Joe Uzdavinis of Northeastern University had been very successful in his encounters with local heavyweights and many believed that he has a good chance to win this title tonight.

Chester Lanier of Medford, Joe Paders of Providence and Bob White of Quincy will have something to say about that.

In the 135-pound class Jimmy McCarron has been doing very well, and so have some of the boys that will oppose him. Frank Riley of Providence is Rhode Island state champion, which should put him up with the favorites.

Artisans Upset Trade Track Team

Mechanic Arts defeated Trade School, 120 to 111, in a dual meet, at the East Armory. In a triangular meet, Hyde Park with 55 points led East Boston and Jamaica Plain in the running events. East Boston had 48 points and Jamaica Plain had 29. The field events are slated for today.

How One Woman Lost 47 Lbs of Fat

In 3 Months and Feels Years Younger

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts for nearly 3 months. I have continued taking one teaspoonful in warm water every morning. I then weighed 217 pounds, was always bothered with pains in my back and lower part of abdomen and sides.

"Now I am glad to say I am a well woman, feel much stronger, years younger and my weight is 170 pounds. I do not only feel better but I look better, so all my friends say.

"I shall never be without Kruschen Salts, will never cease taking my daily dose and more than glad to highly recommend it for the great good that is in it." Mrs. S. A. Solomon, New Bern, N. C.

"P. S. You may think I am exaggerating by writing such a long letter but truly I feel so indebted to you for putting out such wonderful salts that I cannot say enough."

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts 4 weeks cost but a few cents.

When reducing attention to diet will help—cut down on pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—the Kruschen way is the safe way to lose fat.

To take off fat harmlessly and safely, take one half teaspoon of Kruschen in a glass of hot water every morning—don't worry—it's the safe way to reduce.

But be sure for your health's sake that you ask for and get Kruschen Salts. Get them at any drugstore in the world and if the results one bottle brings do not delight you—do not joyfully satisfy you—why money back.

LINCOLN KNEW DEFEAT, SO DID WALLACE

By B. C. Forbes

YOU ARE NOT the only person beset with difficulties. Lincoln, coming to be recognized with the passing of the years as the greatest of all Americans, knew not only difficulties, but defeat after defeat.

At twenty-three he was defeated as a candidate for the Illinois Legislature. Before he was thirty he was a candidate for Speaker of the House in Illinois and was defeated. Two years later he was defeated a second time. At thirty-four he was a candidate for Congress and was defeated. At thirty-five he was defeated as a presidential elector. At forty he failed to become commissioner of the General Land Office. At forty-three he was again defeated as a candidate for presidential elector.

At forty-six he ran for the United States Senate and was defeated. At forty-seven he was candidate for nomination for the vice-presidency and was defeated. At forty-nine he was defeated a second time as candidate for the Senate. At fifty he had known little but defeat.

Domestic Troubles Plentiful

Also, he had more than an average share of domestic troubles.

Most of us need today something of Lincoln's determination, something of Lincoln's dogged perseverance, something of Lincoln's faith in the ultimate triumph of sincere, sustained, honorable effort.

Let's ponder Lincoln's disheartening defeats during the greater part of his life, ponder his final triumph—and inconquerably resolve to wrestle with and overthrow our troubles.

Wallace in Spectacular Comeback

Edgar Wallace, then my lovable chief, walked up to my desk one evening, the indispensable cigarette holder tilted at a rakish angle, his Kaiser Wilhelm mustache groomed to a hair, his raiment a credit to Beau Brummel, and confided:

"I have a little poker game on tonight. Do you think you could write my article for tomorrow morning's editorial page?"

Wallace vowed up to the last that he was lazy, notwithstanding that he wrote more than a dozen ordinary men. He assuredly was lazy in those days, thirty years ago, in Johannesburg, South Africa. He was a sport. His brilliancy was matched only by his indifference to debts. A barber attended him every day in his private office, but whenever he presentd a bill, Wallace with lordly air brushed it aside, telling the barber to keep it until it was worth paying.

Disappeared Unannounced

Finally, he disappeared from the city and the country, unannounced.

He dropped entirely out of sight. The next time I saw him—purely by chance—was in London. He was down at the heels. His appearance was painful. He quickly slunk away.

The world knows what fame and fortune Edgar Wallace ultimately attained. Defeated, subjected to hardship, he did not stay defeated. He got a new grip on himself, a new grip on life. From the depths of failure he rose to the heights of achievement and affluence.

How many of us today are tempted to regard ourselves as failures, tempted to submit to defeat, tempted to lose faith in our ability to stage a comeback?

Why not take heart from this experience of Edgar Wallace?

Responsible financial circles are greatly encouraged over the prospect of prompt passage of "liberalization" of Federal Reserve rediscounting facilities and other immediate desired changes. This was what the stock market so vigorously reflected yesterday.

RESERVE LAW CHANGE WOULD AID STOCKS

By FRANK H. MELOON

Economists who talk carelessly about the Federal Reserve Board's "putting up the stock market" should inform themselves on the subject. They might begin by reading "The Federal Reserve System and the Control of Credit," by Walter Earl Spahr, professor of economics at New York University. This book, by the way, took the first prize of $1000 offered in the eighth annual economic contest sponsored by Alvan T. Simonds, Boston and Worcester industrial leader.

Alvan T. Simonds

Prof. Spahr says regarding the Federal Reserve System:

"Legally the system has nothing to do with the stock market, except to see that its credit is not used there. Therefore, to talk of the Federal Reserve System controlling the stock market is evidence of a confusion of thought."

What the Federal Reserve Board will be expected to do, or able to do, under new laws remains to be seen when those new laws become actualities. A strong foreign feeling was recently manifested, particularly in France, against so-called American "inflation." There is a difference between advancing commodity and other values inordinately and stepping them up to a fair point. Many are today well below the fair point.

A number of Boston trust companies perform certain services at very reasonable rates. Their charge averages 2½ per cent on executorships, 6 per cent on trusteeships, 1 per cent on distribution of principal, etc. Hearing has just been had at the State House on a bill that would curtail their activities in these lines.

Stocks Are Higher in London Market

London, Feb. 12 (AP)—The American plan to broaden the rediscount basis of the Federal Reserve Bank, together with yesterday's firmness of the New York Stock Exchange, created a better atmosphere on the exchange here today.

Business was not greatly increased, but the gilt-edged issues generally were up ¼ to ½. Japanese bonds, oil shares and transatlantic issues also improved. In the exchange market sterling advanced to $3.44⅛.

Most of Markets Closed for Day

New York security and commodity markets, as well as the banks, were closed today. Feb. 12 is a legal holiday in 30 states. Aside from the New Orleans cotton market, there were no major exchanges functioning in this country. The Winnipeg grain market was open.

COLUMBIAN'S REPORT GIVEN

At the 30th annual meeting of the Columbian National Life Insurance Company at its home office, 77 Franklin st., Boston, President Childs presented his report covering 1931.

He called special attention to the fact that life insurance has always afforded one of the easiest and surest methods of building up an estate, and that the conditions which have prevailed the last year or two have strongly emphasized its value in this respect.

During the year 1931 life insurance companies have paid out $2,600,000,000 to policyholders. This amount was disbursed for death claims, matured endowments, surrender values, and loans to policyholders.

President Childs also pointed out that since the company was organized it has paid to policyholders over $50,000,000 This last year its payments to policeholders amounted to over $5,213,607.

It was also mentioned that the policeholders of the company are protected by reserves of over $37,000,000 and, in addition, there is a surplus as regards policyholders of $3,538,333, including a paid up capital of $2,000,000. Thus the protection to policyholders is practically 10 per cent more than the legal requirements.

The company's assets are invested in high grade government, municipal and corporation bonds, preferred stocks of railroad and public utilities, mortgages on real estate averaging only 42 per cent of the value of the properties mortgaged, the home office building, and loans to policyholders secured by their reserves. The net return on investments for the year 1931 was 5.29 per cent.

Blue Ridge Stock Cut Is Approved

New York, Feb. 12 (AP)—By a large majority vote of stockholders, approval has been given to the proposed changes in par value of Blue Ridge Corp. preference shares. The preference stock, under the plan, will be reduced from $50 to no par value, and the preference stated capital from $50 to $25 a share.

Finance Workers Get No Holiday

New York, Feb. 12 (AP)—Lincoln's birthday was no holiday for the executives of the New York regional division of the new Reconstruction Finance Corp., who were making an overtime effort to complete organization of the official personnel.

If Lincoln Were Alive

What Would He Do Today?

FROM PAINTING OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN WHICH HANGS IN THE WHITE HOUSE

> "Let no feeling of discouragement prey upon you, and in the end you are sure to succeed . . .
>
> "The machinery of the nation is out of order. We must run it as we find it. Its intelligent wheels, its rods, its belts are separated, but the boiler seems to be perfect. We must repair the work with such skill and ingenuity as we possess . . .
>
> "To many the present moment appears dark. To me the signs are all glorious . . ."
>
> A. Lincoln

This is the 123d birthday anniversary of Abraham Lincoln.

Apostle of freedom, emancipator of the slave, preserver of the Union, he was a truly great American President. He was a noble figure of all time.

Lincoln was a plain man, and modest. "In my poor, lank lean face nobody has ever seen that any cabbages were sprouting."

He was a kindly, considerate man. "God must have loved the poor; he made so many of them."

He was a patient and brave man. "If God wills that the war continue until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be repaid with another drawn by the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'"

He was a forgiving and a constructive man. "Let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

What would Abraham Lincoln do if he were alive today?

Loving the poor and unfortunate, he would bind up THEIR wounds by providing abundant relief for those who have borne the adversities of these times.

As a kindly man and constructive genius, he would be putting American citizens to work on American projects which would preserve the dignity of useful labor while expanding the natural resources of his country.

As a great American statesman, he would beware of the wars which disturb the earth today just as he ordered England to preserve neutrality between the North and South.

As a patriotic American, he would shun and condemn the present tendencies toward dangerous entangling political alliances, just as he pledged fealty to the American independent policies of his great predecessor, General George Washington.

Being a plain and modest man, he would prosecute all these fine American policies, without timidity and without striving for partisan political advantage.

Abraham Lincoln was convinced that America's destiny lay within America. He was convinced that America's most valuable contribution to the world would be in setting up a good example of righteousness and integrity to the world, not of becoming involved in the world's rivalries, jealousies and wars.

We honor Lincoln greatly.

We need another like him today.

Philippines Need America As Far East Smoulders

In view of the grave developments on the mainland of Asia, Congress should postpone indefinitely further consideration of all proposals to end American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands, now or at any fixed date in the future.

Any change in the status quo of the islands at this time would aggravate the serious situation created by the warfare between Japan and China.

The Mosquito Fleet which the United States maintains on the Asiatic station is based on Manila.

If we cannot protect our nationals in China without becoming involved in Japan's quarrel with China, and decide to evacuate them, the Philippines is the nearest and logical haven of refuge.

To abandon the Philippines to their fate until they are prepared, economically, politically and from a military point of view, to maintain their independence would be a desertion of duty.

It is true that the Philippines need American sovereignty in this crisis far more than the United States needs the Philippines.

But it is to the interest of both the American and Philippine peoples that they continue their present relationship until its future can be considered in calmer times.

New York Day by Day

Thoughts While Strolling

NEW YORK, Feb. 12—Thoughts while strolling: What a tune "I Love Louisa" will make for merry-go-rounds. The gloomy Untermeyer home on the avenue at 48th st. The younger Adrienne Morrison—mother of the Bennett girls. Lillian Gish wears her hair in a mid-Victorian neck knot.

Bugs Baer, a Washington, D. C., boy, who made good in the city. I get Pat O'Brien and Pat Somerset mixed. Frustrated types who attend interpretive dance exhibits. Jack Murray and Grover Whalen look alike. And Ted Snyder suggests Richard Carle. Lucius Boomer's stage butler sideburns.

One-word description of Kate Smith—mountainous. Who remembers when grandma snipped off the shirt-tail to make a new collar? Overheard: "He has a high-brow study with a little bar attached." Percy Crosby in town from his Virginia estate. Gone completely country, sah!

Will Hays chews gum, too. Chick Endor, who writes those ribald night club lyrics, spent his youth on the north end of a south-bound plow. The wand-like Claire Luce. Remindful of a white hyacinth. Louis Joseph Vance started wearing a monocle on a dare. Elsie Janis is a sucker for celery.

Something ineffably sad about the rap of an auctioneer's hammer. No "peeve" books about Hollywood lately. Glittering ladies with everything in jewels save a wedding ring. Charles I. Scott, the insurance man—my boyhood idea of a city chap. Silver hair, high collar and everything.

Charles MacArthur was met from a European wandering the other day by his talented wife, Helen Hays, and their "act of Providence" baby girl. The baby could not talk when the playwright sailed. But since had been coached to say "Dado, mon-nee!" And that is how she greeted her returning parent.

The late Legs Diamond and later Arnold Rothstein were once yoked in dubious under-world didoes. Legs acted as a bodyguard for the Broadway gambler. On that early morning Diamond was pistoled to death, a phone call came to the haunt of gangsters in the 40's. A voice whispered: "Legs just took off to join Arnie." There was a collective shudder. All knew.

A caper of composing room print shops in other days was to show a cub reporter "type lice." Before forms were adjusted columns were soaked with a spongeful of water. The novice was told to bend and peer closely into the type for vermin. A quick shove at the end of the column and inky squirts sprayed, with malicious merriment, into an innocent's face. A copy chief who made me the victim of this hoax was the target for morning hymns of hate for years afterward. I hoped he would come to no good end. Years, like dividends, passed. Yesterday I saw him. He graced the executive desk of an important enterprise. He showed me about his elaborately modernistic quarters and stopping before a mirrored door, said: "We'll peek in here!" I stepped in, but remembering the type lice, expected another gag. You know, come out all covered with flour or something! Instead it was a circular bar with four leather-covered stools like a Paris bistro. A further surprise was a taffy-haired English barmaid, as Britishly righto indeed as Collie and Kittie, the duo presiding so delightfully for years at the London Savoy.

An after-dinner divertissement these coolish evenings is called "Ambition." Players express hidden desires. For instance, Rita Weiman ached to be a grasper of opportunities, while Mildred Cornwell desired only to be a humble stifler of yawns. Mary Ellis, with odd feminine perversity, was quite content to be a mere plumper of pillows.

Listen, World!

"A Little Back Door?"

THAT LITTLE back door by which the monster came and went. Perhaps you recall it in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Perhaps you didn't notice it particularly, for you were too busy shuddering over that horrible, pitiful transformation of a man into a fiend.

And, as a matter of fact, Dr. Jekyll didn't notice that little back door very much himself—at first. For many year, through his eager, inquisitive boyhood; through his vigorous, radical young manhood; there had been no place in his life for little, low, back doors. He had been a Front Door Man, going openly, bravely on his way. Men criticized him for his frankness; quarreled with him for his recklessness. But he laughed—went freely forward.

And then something happened—something outside himself; something inside himself. He began to make secret experiments which he did not let the world see. He began to permit himself certain furtive indulgences—to sneak out on himself—

TO SNEAK OUT THAT LITTLE BACK DOOR.

In "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" that little back door was made of oak; but really it is only a symbolic story of what went on in a man's soul. That laboratory, with its complicated maze of instruments, retorts and test tubes, was Dr. Jekyll's soul. And the little back door was built, not of oak, but of his own secret, vicious, self-indulgence.

Dr. Jekyll did not take these self-indulgences very seriously at first. They began naturally enough. They began in his rebellion against conventional life—in his resentment at the shackles of respectability.

There was "another self" in him which was not as respectable as the great Dr. Jekyll whom the world knew—an animal self, vulgar, bestial. That animal self was restless. It wanted to have its fling. And Dr. Jekyll had discovered a way by which it could have its fling. He could let his other self go free—escape through that little secret back door of his self-indulgence into the darkness and the wildness which it craved.

Surely there was no harm in that. Nobody need know. And what a relief it would be, after his straight-laced days, just to run amuck for a little while.

So he thought—excusing to himself his secret monstrosity.

BUT THE DAY CAME WHEN HE COULDN'T GET BACK. HE HAD LOST THE KEY! AND THE MONSTER SELF, WHICH HE BELIEVED HE CONTROLLED, NOW CONTROLLED HIM—AND SWEPT HIM INTO A HELL OF HIS OWN MAKING.

That is the story of Dr. Jekyll's soul—of EVERY MAN'S SOUL—

Every man has a little back door of self-indulgence, and every man has a Mr. Hyde self who sneaks in and out of that little back door.

YOU, TOO, HAVE ANOTHER SELF!

Yes, I know; you deny it with snorts of indignation. But you know that the charge is true.

Your other self is not yet a hideous, fanged monster, such as emerged from Dr. Jekyll. Perhaps it is only a small silly, sneaky little shadow, making brief and trivial excursions into bad temper and dishonesty, cruelty and nasty speculation — LITTLE EXCURSIONS THAT "DON'T COUNT."

But remember, that is what Dr. Jekyll thought when he first allowed his other self to prowl. He, too, thought that prowling wouldn't count. He, too, thought that "nobody would ever know."

BUT WITH EVERY PROWLING THE MONSTER GREW AND GREW STRONGER, MORE VICIOUS, UNTIL AT LAST IT RULED HIS WORLD!

Beware of a little back door—of secret self-indulgence that "don't count."

EVERYTHING YOU DO COUNTS, BE IT EVER SO SECRET.

EVERY ACT, HOWEVER TRIVIAL, WILL MAKE YOU MORE OF A MAN OR MORE OF A MONSTER!

Just Folks

Abraham Lincoln

Remembered still! Along the years
His gentle influence appears,
And where for truth men dare to strive
Is martyred Lincoln still alive,
Calm, patient, tender and as bold
As in the troubled days of old.

Not many men outlive their years!
Not oft the finished soul appears!
Not oft a Lincoln comes to earth
Through the obscurity of birth
To reach that pinnacle sublime
That towers above both death and time.

Most of us with the last quick breath
Into oblivion go with death,
And soon remembered are no more,
But Lincoln, greater than before,
To faltering hope and weakening will,
Remains an inspiration still!

The 'Fool Democrats,' Hoarding and Relief

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

IT IS NOT very complimentary to the intelligence of the Democratic party that the Republican press hails the possibility of a contest for the Presidential nomination as a harbinger of victory for the discredited Hoover Administration. If the claims of the Democracy on public confidence rest merely on personalities, and if principles and programs have no effect, the party is in a bad way and really has but little excuse for being.

Above the shouting and the turmoil just now we think we can hear from the millions of the rank and file a note of protest over the disposition of too many Democrat leaders to stake the fate of the party on persons.

By every rule of common sense, we assume that the public will pass on the fitness of the Democracy for power on the manner in which it conducts itself in matters of public policy during the next few months.

With every indication of victory in November, it is inevitable that a number of men will aspire to the Presidential nomination. There may be a spirited fight in the convention—we do not know. But if the party takes its stand four-square on policies and principles that appeal to a sorely distressed people, any good man nominated can be elected. He can be elected unless Democrats, running true to form in recent years, cling to their preference for fighting each other in the midst of the battle instead of turning their guns on the common enemy.

* * *

Nothing Disturbing About a Contest

Thomas Jefferson was elected in 1800 because the electoral vote of New York was cast for him.

At that time Aaron Burr assumed the leadership of the Democracy in New York. He was a consummate politician and a wise leader. He started out with the determination to eliminate personal considerations and to concentrate on victory.

In the organization of his forces he held many conferences at his home at Richmond Hill. At each conference he made a preliminary announcement — that no one present should inject a personal note or introduce a controversial topic relating to individuals. He made it plain that any one who violated the rule would be asked to leave the conference.

No one left the conference, for no one violated the order; and the result was a unified party—and victory.

It seems probable now that there will be a contest over nominations, and there is nothing disturbing about that. For a hundred years we have had such contests in almost all conventions. Only twice in a hundred years did the party lose because of the fighting over the nomination.

* * *

The Republicans' Nomination Is Made

It would be infinitely more promising for the Republicans if they were approaching a convention involving a spirited contest for the nomination. Their nomination is made. It is not a few, not a group, that is dissatisfied with the nomination made—it is the mass, easily nine-tenths. How they would rejoice if the bar of precedent were down for a group of candidates to contest for the nomination! There is not an intelligent politician among them who would not feel that the possibility of a contest would enormously enhance the possibilities of victory.

But there is the bar; and they will enter the convention with a feeling of depression and discouragement and go through the necessary forms of making a nomination few will want to make.

The Democrats in Congress are making a fine record that is making an impression on thinking people, and a clean fight in the convention will do no harm—if Democrats can persuade themselves to hate the foe instead of hating each other.

Two Ways to End the Hoarding

The portion of the public which is not hoarding money will follow with curiosity, as well as sympathy, the means devised by the President's anti-hoarding commission to coax the money from hiding.

It seems that committees are to be formed in every community to make a house-to-house canvass to persuade the hoarders to put their money in circulation.

There are just two ways to end the hoarding—one is to restore confidence, which is not likely to come until business begins to thrive, and the other is to make business pick up by putting men to work for wages through the floating of a prosperity loan.

Colonel Frank Knox, head of the committee, a very able man, has just told us something of the nature of our trouble:

> "We are suffering from a national headache, the result of too much eye strain, watching what is going on in Europe. We cannot correct conditions in Europe. We can correct them at home."

If Colonel Knox can impress this idea upon the Administration at Washington, which is suffering abnormally from this eye strain, he will be entitled to the civic crown.

No Relief for the 8,000,000 Jobless

Senator Watson predicts that none of the measures for the relief of the unemployed and the starving Americans will be passed. Relief measures have been adopted—for the relief of bankers, railroads and industries. But none for the relief of the 8,000,000 jobless and the 25,000,000 who face the bread and butter problem on which life depends.

Some Senators announce they will vote no relief for the starving women and children, in any form, until President Hoover and his "relief chief, Walter Gifford, advise that it is needed."

We may dismiss President Hoover at once—he is against doing anything for the jobless.

And Mr. Gifford will be an unintelligent adviser. His woful lack of information on conditions, disclosed in his testimony before the La Follette committee, made him a pathetic spectacle.

We Need Him Now

By George E. Phair

His was the hand that broke the iron chain
That held a race in bondage and despair.
His was the hand that rent the bars in twain
That men might walk in freedom's blessed air.

And now the wraith of bondage looms once more
And lays its hand upon the Nation's heart.
Or black or white, all men must bow before
The royal masters of the money mart.

Men walk the streets with hunger in their eyes,
Beaten by fear and hopelessness and cold.
Would God another Lincoln might arise
To free the Nation from its chains of gold.
